

Monday December 30 1996

Table with exchange rates for various currencies including Abu Dhabi, Albania, Argentina, etc.

The Guardian INTERNATIONAL NEWSPAPER OF THE YEAR 46,747

Printed in London, Manchester, Frankfurt and Roubaix

What will last into the new millennium?

Five pages of unrivalled writing

Media

The big freeze

A Parisian makes the most of sub-zero temperatures at the Trocadero fountains

PHOTOGRAPH: LAURENT REBOURS

Freezing weather sweeps across Europe

John Ezzard

It was fun if you were a skater on the Thames at Hampton Court or a skater at the Eiffel Tower yesterday. But elsewhere in Paris a clochard died, becoming the city's sixth homeless victim within four days of a freeze which gripped Britain and gripped savagely across Europe. More is forecast over the next few days.

to -30°C in northern Italy's mountains after a mild Christmas during which some southerners went swimming. Weather paralysed the central region of Umbria, while drifts closed the main motorway from Rome northwards. Much of Venice was under water for only the second time this century.

round the North Sea and Baltic coasts. The federal agency for shipping in Hamburg said conditions were expected to worsen in the next few days. Sections of the Danube and Main rivers in the southern state of Bavaria were frozen over. Some German towns were as cold as Italian mountains. The Main-Danube canal froze solid.

man walking home only a mile or so after visiting his mother. In Britain, William and Jill Wallis, both aged 68, died after trying to rescue their Labrador, Tara, from a frozen lake at Aveley, Essex. Two people who tried to help needed treatment for hypothermia.

spate of breakdowns by drivers heading for work or the sales. A rare scum of ice formed on both sides of the Thames at Reading. Trucks were unable to walk most of the river near Hampton Court in west London. The London Weather Centre said today would bring more bitterly cold conditions, with a north-east wind and more snow or sleet in many eastern areas.

Doubt cast on tagging scheme

Research suggests electronic curfews are not cost-effective

Alex Trowle Home Affairs Editor

ELECTRONIC tagging will have to be used for more than 15,000 criminals at any one time if the scheme is to be profitable for the private security companies that run it, according to internal Home Office calculations. The figure means that 25 per cent of those currently serving community sentences would have to be tagged if the scheme is to become cost-effective. In the United States, where tagging is widely used, the proportion is only 2.5 per cent.

ging was not cost-effective," he said. "Tagging can only work if the private companies involved can make a sustained and significant profit." Despite the internal Home Office figures, ministers are considering a rapid increase in use of the new court sentence following official research published yesterday showing that the latest trials have been 75 per cent successful. The Home Office research report says more work and many more trial-curfew orders are needed before the scheme can go national. The Prime Minister has already announced that tags are to be used for children as young as 10. So far a total of 236 criminals have been tagged as part of monitoring six-month curfew orders imposed by the courts over the past 18 months in Manchester, Reading and Norfolk. One hundred and eleven have been completed and 51 are still being monitored.

Harry Fletcher: 'twice failure rate of probation' found that most were successfully completed and 19 had to be revoked by the courts because of repeated breaches. Most offenders had been convicted of theft, burglary and driving while disqualified. This 75 per cent success rate compares with the original trials held in 1989 when 30 per cent of those tagged breached their curfew. However the official report says the sample is too small to provide a proper evaluation. The researchers say that the companies are using much better equipment than was available in 1989 and the staff involved are professional and competent. But it adds that the role of the probation service must be clarified as many of those tagged needed professional support which could not be provided by the security companies. It also reports a growing confidence among magistrates in using the orders. The trials began in July 1995 in a blaze of bad publicity when the first offender to be tagged, a Norfolk shoplifter, broke his curfew 40 times in five weeks. Since then magistrates have tended to avoid tagging offenders with a drug or alcohol problem and used them for those most likely to complete the order. The Home Office minister Lady Blatch welcomed the research: "It makes clear that tagging can be a worthwhile community sentence. It punishes criminals by restricting their liberty and it is a cost-effective alternative to prison." She said average costs were slightly less than probation and half the cost of sending the offender to prison. But Mr Fletcher claimed that the 25 per cent failure rate was twice the rate for probation and said the tagging completion rates were artificially high. "In many cases offenders were wrongly told by the courts that the tag was an alternative to custody," he said. Richard Powell, managing director of Securicor Custodial Services, said he was delighted that the Home Office research findings were positive. "The report makes clear that electronic monitoring orders represent a highly useful and cost-effective alternative to prison."

Leaders trade insults for new year

Major: I stand by my record

Michael White Political Editor

JOHN MAJOR last night fired the opening salvo in the longest and potentially dirtiest election campaign in recent memory when he offered voters "a choice between two futures" — stability under the Tories or Labour's "untried, inexperienced, unrealistic alternative". As Tony Ashdown, the Liberal Democrat leader, warned that negative campaigning and short-term thinking looked set to produce "the least intelligent election ever", Mr Major promised "a future that looks rosy with the best economic conditions that this country has seen for a century". He backed it with five Tony Blair-style pledges on the economy and Europe: lower taxes, prices, and mortgage rates, more jobs, and a strong defence of the national interest against European federalism. "Only the Conservatives can deliver and build on Britain's stability and prosperity," he declared.

"It is not my nature to walk away from a fight. We will win the election because it is too risky to trust Labour." — John Major

"There is now a real danger that Britain will sleepwalk into the next millennium — our politics contaminated by negative campaigning, our actions dominated by short-term thinking and our government avoiding issues instead of confronting them" — Paddy Ashdown tive to launch expensive media campaigns against each other. Mr Ashdown, who has little of either, made a virtue of it.

Proudly boasting of the growing Lib Dem record at local government level, he hammered away at the theme that — across the spectrum of policies — "Liberal Democrats can make a difference". He told supporters: "There is now a real danger, under either of the other parties, that Britain will sleepwalk into the next millennium — our politics contaminated by negative campaigning, our actions dominated by short-term thinking and our government avoiding issues instead of confronting them."

Pledging the Liberal Democrats to include in "whether the politics of insult nor the politics of illusion" he paraded fully costed pledges for smaller class sizes, shorter NHS waiting lists and 3,000 extra police on the beat.

Labour has promoted broadly similar priorities and Mr Major also singled out the same three public services. "Every previous Labour government has mismanaged the economy and every person has paid the price through high taxes, mortgages, prices and fewer jobs — if a new Labour government acted as Labour has always done, we would all suffer," he said in a clear attempt to tie New Labour to the Old Labour past.

Mr Blair will make his own riposte today. Both major parties have the money and mo-

New Internationalist magazine

John doesn't get it

SO HE DOESN'T KNOW that free market economics is making poor people poorer, he doesn't see the connection between personal greed and the state we're in, and he doesn't understand that helping yourself can be at the expense of others. Don't be like John — get the NI.

Post to: New Internationalist, FREEPOST SG599, PO Box 79, Hertford SG14 1YB

NO-RISK TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION

Subscription form with fields for name, address, phone, and a 'YES' button to start the trial.

Navigation bar with sections: Inside, Britain, World News, Finance, Sport, Comment and Letters 2, Obituaries 10, G2, Crossword 15; Weather 16, Radio 16; TV 16. Includes a barcode and the number 770261 307316.

Fans in tune with band that knows the score

It took a last-minute equaliser to drown out the sound of Sheffield Wednesday's musical followers bringing a new one-two to football's Premiership grounds

Monday sketch

Nick Varley

JOHAN Hemmington heads for Stamford Bridge's away end, hiding his "offensive weapon" — for that is what several football clubs have deemed it to be.

He moves past the orange-bibbed stewards, the yellow-clad mounted police officers and the packs of their dog-handling colleagues, all of them oblivious to the moulded metal he is carrying.

Perhaps if it was out of its case, with the winter sunshine bouncing off one of its polished edges, they would notice.

Instead the first most of the 28,000 inside Chelsea's ground know of the Sheffield Wednesday fans who are about to hunt them all afternoon is when John opens his case and decides it is time for action.

As he gives the signal and sounds a fanfare, fellow supporters crane their necks to see what the commotion behind them is. They stand and their faces light up. The band is in.

For John is not the leader of some modern South Yorkshire version of Chelsea's "The Headhunters" hooligan contingent, but the boss of a far more laudable — and listenable — firm: Wednesday's fans' band.

As the team have notched up an impressive Premiership run of 10 games unbeaten, the musicians — three trumpeters, a trombonist and a saxophonist as well as four drummers — have been recording equally rave reviews.

"Wonderful... a nice change from the normal grumpy stance," one reporter noted. Wednesday manager David Pleat has said: "Wimbledon wouldn't let them in and we lost 4-2." Even rival teams' fans have been calling Radio 5 Live's 606 phone-in to sing the band's praises.

As several of the older fans in the away end at Chelsea on Saturday noted, it is all a far cry from football's earlier golden eras before the advent of hooliganism. But, just as teams are now importing foreigners by the private jet full, so the fans are having to adopt continental techniques.

During Euro 96 any game featuring Holland would be accompanied by an oompah band bashing out the March to Aids, while the Swiss had a bugler to accompany the massed ranks of cow bells.

The treated atmosphere — the one ingredient all too often missing from today's swanky Premiership grounds.

In the report into the 1988

Trumpeter John Hemmington with Steve Holmes and James Priestley at Stamford Bridge

disaster at Wednesday's Hillsborough ground, which led to the all-seater stadia, Lord Justice Taylor noted: "To many young men the camaraderie of singing together, jumping up and down, responding in unison to the naming of players, their emergence onto the pitch, the scoring of a goal, an unpopular decision — all of these are an integral part of enjoying the match."

But he concluded: "I am not convinced that the cherished culture of the terraces is wholly lost when fans are seated... the communal spirit is still there and finds ready expression."

Except that it does not. In the latest survey of Premiership fans, most wanted an area of non-reserved seating set aside for fans who wanted to sing and chant.

Clubs such as Liverpool, which used to be regarded as near invincible at home, thanks in part to the fans' vociferous support, now hold no advantage with their toned-down terraces.

Last month Wednesday won at Liverpool — a victory accomplished to a non-stop cacophony of drums, wailing horns and singing. Just before Christmas their off-field players merited mentions in five of the match reports of Wednesday's draw at Spurs.

But Chelsea are no spectators of reputations. At each game the band warns the hosts of its visit and collection of "offensive weapons". Stamford Bridge has barred them before and so the usual nine dwindled to three.

With the pre-match backing of Wednesday officials, car salesman John, aged 38, and his cohorts, Steve Holmes and James Priestley, do get in. But they are late, due to a crash on the M1. Their team go one down within a minute of their arrival and two behind 15 minutes later.

Mark Penbridge immediately strikes one back and the band's nameless theme tune — a variation on Aids — moves from mid-tempo mournfulness to a triumphant upbeat march — and then switches between the two for the best part of an hour.

Interspersed are horn-led versions of the usual football chants. John said: "Other clubs have tried to get musicians in, but the difference with us is we are all fans — season ticket holders — first.

We know the chants and when to play them. In a way we're doing what the people who used to start the songs did."

"People also come up with new songs, which is part of terrace culture. It would be a crying shame if that died out, which I think it might if people don't do something about it."

Almost three years to the day since John smuggled a bugle into a game at Everton under his jumper, he starts up on his trumpet (the club have bought one horn and a couple of drums, but the band is otherwise independent).

The lament of Wednesday's Theme echoes as Chelsea push forward and score a third. The beat increases and further still as Wednesday counter two minutes into injury time. When a mis-hit clearance drops to an orange shirt, the noise is at a crescendo as almost all 800 away fans follow out the tune.

Dejan Stefanovic volleys home and for the first time the band is drowned out. The future sound of football is lost among the type of roar which once needed no catalyst.

On the way out a Chelsea supporter shouts: "When's the CD out?" But, for once in modern football, commerce is not a consideration.

Guatemalans march through their capital yesterday to mark the signing of a treaty ending decades of civil war

Peace treaty ends Guatemalan war

Phil Gannon
Latin America
Correspondent

GUATEMALANS anxious to put Latin America's longest armed conflict behind them crowded the main plaza outside the National Palace in Guatemala City yesterday to witness the signing of a peace accord between the government and leftwing guerrillas.

Hundreds of cheering supporters greeted the ageing leaders of the Guatemala National Revolutionary Unity (URNG) guerrilla front as they returned from exile to put an end to nearly 40 years of war.

The country's armed forces, which waged the conflict with extreme brutality and participated only reluctantly in the peace process, contributed to the festive spirit with music from a military band.

"We are thrilled to return to Guatemala and finally achieve peace," said Pablo Monsanto, commander of the Rebel Armed Forces (FAE), one of four factions which make up the URNG. "I hope we will have a country with justice," he added.

Around 10,000 Indians poured into the capital's central ceremonial early yesterday, and people threw red carnations on the tomb of former president Jacobo Arbenz, overthrown in a CIA-backed coup in 1964.

The treaty signed yesterday is the product of six years of painful negotiation and will come into effect in three stages, concluding in 2000.

United Nations mediator Jean Arnault warned that the international community, which has done much to bring the two sides together, should not turn its attention from the tasks that lie ahead.

"We need to beef up Guatemala's institutions to improve its social equality," he said.

Among those present at the signing ceremony were Spain's prime minister, José María Aznar, and the outgoing UN secretary-general, Boutros Boutros-Ghali.

One of the issues that will face Mr. Boutros-Ghali's successor, Kofi Annan, is the deployment of 155 UN peacekeepers to supervise the demobilisation of URNG combatants, a move opposed by China because of Guatemala's diplomatic links with Taiwan.

The elected, civilian government of President Alvaro Arzu is committed under the peace plan to reforms which will cost an estimated $1.6 billion, of which little has so far been forthcoming from the international community.

Guatemala's 1992 Nobel Peace Prize winner, the indigenous leader Rigoberta Menchú, drew attention to the need for financial support. "We must face the serious economic and social problems afflicting the majority of Guatemalans, which were what caused the war," he said.

"The population, around half of which is indigenous, remains deeply divided along class and ethnic lines.

The FAR founder, Cesar Montes, has spoken of the need for a complete overhaul of Guatemala's economic model. What is needed, he said, is one which "confronts social discrimination head on".

The URNG intends to form a political party to take this message to the electorate.

Major's message: the rhetoric and the reality

How the facts measure up to the Prime Minister's new year claims yesterday

Tax

Major said: "Having cut the basic rate from 33p to 23p, we aim to get it down to 20p. Labour has 230 billion spending pledges but will not say where the money will come from."

Labour says: Direct taxes have gone up since 1992, along with other taxes. Gordon Brown aims to create a starter rate of tax at 15p or 10p. Talk of £20bn pledges is a "Tory lie". All firm Labour commitments are fully costed.

The facts: The Tories have brought down the basic rate of income tax by 10p to 23p in the pound. But in the process they have more than doubled the rate of VAT from 8 to 17.5 per cent, broadened VAT to include electricity and gas; imposed new taxes on insurance premiums and air travel; reduced the value of mortgage tax relief from 40p in the pound to 15p in the pound; raised the national insurance ceiling; heavily taxed company cars and imposed a windfall tax on banks.

Prices

Major said: "We will keep inflation firmly under control. Labour has no plans for controlling prices and has no inflation targets."

Labour says: "We will set and hold a target for low and stable inflation," once in office. Under the Tories inflation remains high by international standards.

The facts: The UK's current headline rate of inflation at 2.7 per cent is broadly twice that of Germany and France. During John Major's period as Chancellor it jumped to 9.5 per cent in 1990 before a deep recession forced it down to 1.6 per cent in 1993. It has since climbed again.

Mortgages

Major says: "By keeping inflation and interest rates low we will ensure that the repayment on people's homes — their biggest monthly outlay — remains affordable. Labour cannot be trusted to protect people's mortgages."

Labour says: What a cheek! John Major presided over 15 per cent interest rates, a collapse of the housing market, record negative equity and home repossessions which Labour plans will ease. Real interest rates are still high — and set to rise in the spring.

The facts: During the 1990s the numbers of people in Britain with negative equity jumped to a record level of 1.7 per cent and the mortgage rate hit 15.07 per cent in 1990. Many people lost their homes through repossessions. The mortgage rate fell back to a 30-year low of 6.45 per cent in September 1996, before rising. Base and mortgage rates could rise one percentage point in 1997.

Europe

Major said: "We will continue to help businesses create jobs, particularly for the young. Labour would destroy jobs with the minimum wage and Social Chapter."

Labour says: There are 1 million more jobs than in 1979 and most new jobs are low-wage and insecure. Labour would set up a Low Pay Commission with employers and unions to ensure minimum wage is realistic. Windfall levy on utility profits will finance jobs or training for 250,000 young people.

The facts: Under the Tories the unemployment rate reached the 3.1 million level in 1996, before beginning to fall. The jobless rate was back at 2.9 million in 1993, dropping to 1.9 million in November this year. At the present 7.7 per cent of the workforce the jobless rate is much lower than in most of the EU but considerably higher than Japan and the US. It is also almost twice the 4 per cent level which the Tories inherited from Labour in 1979.

Jobs

Major says: "We will fight for a Europe of globally competitive nation states, not a Federal Europe. Labour would undermine our right to say No to policies that would harm our country and sign up to the job destroying Social Chapter."

Labour says: Major has alienated Europe by weak leadership and creeping Euro-scepticism. Labour would not abandon veto on essential interests, but would examine the case for more majority voting on industry, environmental and regional policy as well as Social Chapter.

The facts: John Major negotiated opt-outs on monetary union and the Social Chapter at Maastricht. Among all the EU members the UK has the best record in implementing the single market and adhering to EU trade rulings.

Reports: Alex Brummer and Michael White

Labour rejects unions' hope of partnership

Seamus Milne
Labour Editor

THE Labour leadership yesterday slapped down claims of a new understanding with the trade unions and rejected outright a senior union official's suggestion that a Labour government might set up a national "social partnership" forum with employers and the TUC.

Stephen Byers, the Labour employment spokesman at the centre of September's TUC row over the party-union links, said a proposal from John Edmonds, leader of the GMB union, for new tripartite structures to discuss jobs, training, the European Social Chapter and low pay would mean "turning the clock back".

Mr Edmonds's ideas — including an expanded role for public sector pay review bodies — were published yesterday as John Monks, TUC general secretary, said unions would have to break the "habits of opposition" under a Labour administration and develop a relationship of social partnership between employers, unions and government.

But claims that Tony Blair and the unions have reached a better understanding over their post-election relationship since the debacle at the TUC conference were dismissed by one senior Labour source as "clutching at straws and whistling in the wind".

Labour would have a similar approach to public sector pay as the present government, he warned, and any challenge from public service workers would simply provide Mr Blair with the opportunity for an "early sorting out" of the relationship. It might, the source added, "be as well for them to test the will of the government early on so there is no misunderstanding for the remainder of the administration".

The fierceness of New Labour's response appeared mainly aimed at putting a swift end to Mr Edmonds's kite-flying about joint consultations with unions and employers, with its echoes of 1970s-style corporatism. Mr Byers said Labour believed in creating the "right climate for both sides of industry to work together", rather than a "formal machinery of government".

But there was also cold comfort for Mr Monks, who has worked hard to accommodate the new Labour agenda. He told unions in his new year message yesterday that there would be "no backstairs dealing" with a Labour government. A Blair administration would not be a "cavalry coming over the hill to rescue us. Our future lies in our own hands."

Mr Edmonds said yesterday he was advocating "working groups" or "contact points", rather than a revival of the old tripartite National Economic Development Council (Neddy) machinery abolished by the Thatcher government.

Tim Melville-Ross, chairman of the Institute of Directors, said yesterday that unions had resisted efforts to free the labour market in the 1980s. "But unions have changed and there ought to be a readiness to accept a new role for unions," he added.

OR talk to insurance people who treat you like an individual. Interested? Call 0800 333 800 for a motor or home quote.

EAGLE STAR Direct

Phone for a free quote weekdays 8am-9pm, Saturday 9am-2pm. Motor insurance not available in Northern Ireland.

مكتبة من الاجل

صحة من الامم

Inventory published after 450 years

One of the volumes which make up the 'fantastically intimate' inventory, soon to be made available to scholars

PHOTOGRAPH BY SEAN SMITH

Shopaholic Henry's kingsize list

Maev Kennedy on 'the ultimate testament of the kleptomaniac king'

THEM four sheets of hollande serving for foote sheets some of them being perished with holes. Henry VIII died 450 years ago next month, but is still alive and breathing in the meticulous black ink entries of the inventory of his possessions. The inventory, a unique document of huge historical importance, is soon to be published for the first time. The Society of Antiquaries bought it specifically to publish it "immediately" and make it available to scholars. The Antiquaries work on a different time frame from ordinary mortals. They bought two volumes in 1792, and these will be published with the two volumes owned by the British Library, in the spring. The whole Henry is in the four hefty volumes. His best clothes, his fabulous jewels "delivered from the King's secret jewel house", his paintings, his bed curtains "of blew scaromet embroidered with diverse things as Antelopes and trees", the pewter chamber pots from his carved and embroidered close stools, his musical and scientific instruments, his broken spectacles, worn-out tennis balls, and his horses are all there. It is an astonishing document which has scarcely been studied until now. The British Library's volumes have not been on display, and the Antiquaries' have been locked up in a corner cupboard of their magnificent library at Burlington House in London. They will be loaned to an exhibition opening on the anniversary of Henry's death, at the National Portrait Gallery in January. A team of scholars, led by historian David Starkey, the expert on the Tudors, is contributing essays on different aspects of Henry, the armour, precious metals, costumes and furniture, animals and books. "It is a fantastically intimate document," Dr Starkey said. "The ultimate testament of the kleptomaniac shopaholic king."

It also demonstrates his fantastic wealth, which was not just avarice but a vital tool of state, Dr Starkey said. "Every time a reception was held at Hampton Court the entire room was reconstructed. The rooms were just bare boxes, and they were lined with sumptuous tapestries, and heaped to the ceiling with plate. The intention was to dazzle and subjugate all beholders." One attempt to cost the inventory arrived at a Tudor value of £300,000 for the armour and weapons, and the same again for the jewels and plate, sums almost impossible to translate into contemporary prices. The stocktakers also found the cupboard full of the bandages kept for strapping Henry's gouty legs. The inventory was completed within five years of his death, during the precarious reign of his fragile heir. "This boke made the xxth of January in the three years of the Reigne of our mooste dradde Sovereigns Lorde Edward the Vith." The preamble makes great play of the faithful accounting for every plate, coin and jewel belonging to the late king. Dr Starkey was fascinated to track how much of the money from the Dissolution of the Monasteries Henry kept. He spent like a lord, but he hoarded too. The charm of the inventory, however, is not in the richest but in the meannest objects. In the warrens of palaces every store, every junk room, every cupboard, was turned out. Henry had more tablecloths than anyone else in England and robes to stun the viewers at the sheer shimmering splendour and bulk of the man. But he did not get rich by ever throwing anything away. "Then, two pair of sheets of holland, sore worn."

Henry VIII... inventory runs to four hefty volumes

King's ransom

- Item: two olde rotten trussing sheets full of holes.
- Item: Two peces of unyoornes horne.
- Item: one sett of chessmen of wood in a boxe of wood foure of theym being broken.
- Item: two little babies in a boxe of wood one of theym having a gowne of crymson satten and thother a gowne of white vellat.
- Item: One Mouffeller of purple vellat embrawdred with pirls of damaske golde garnished with small perles and smale stones of soundrie sortes and furred with Sables.
- Item: one hatte of purple vellat embrawdred with pirls of damaske golde garnished with smale peeles and smale stones of sundrie sortes and frengid with golde.

The Guardian Personality of the Year

- Today is your last chance to vote for the Personality of the Year. The entries in the BBC poll were published on January 1, 1997. Cast your vote now.
- Neil Hamilton For services to the Labour Party: 2887 229 958
 - Jane Austen For services to TV ratings: 2887 229 958
 - Duchess of York For services to republicanism: 2887 229 958
 - Quentin Davies For services to parliamentary democracy: 2887 229 958
 - Neil Jordan For services to republicanism: 2887 229 958
 - Kenneth Clarke For services to Europe: 2887 229 958

Hollywood toasts another record year at box office

This is the fifth successive year of improved takings. But the cost of making movies rose by an average 8 per cent in 1996. The Motion Picture Association of America says that the typical Hollywood film cost $53 million to make and another $17.7 million to market. For Hollywood, the growing overseas market — which in many cases is now more profitable than the once-dominant US market — represents a strategic shift. Strip-tease, starring Demi Moore, which failed disastrously in the US with takings of only $33 million, was rendered profitable by foreign markets, where it took $65 million.

New row over 'evil' abortion

Michael White Political Editor

THE prospect that anti-abortion activists will target as many as 50 MPs in a high-profile attempt to influence the outcome of the general election was given a significant boost yesterday when Cardinal Basil Hume described abortion as "a great evil in our society".

On GMTV's Sunday Programme Cardinal Hume, the head of the Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales, encouraged both "social action" and political intervention in opposition to abortion. A recent ruling by the European Commission on Human Rights makes their impact even more uncertain. It would allow such campaigners to lead voters in a particular area about any candidate's stance on a given issue — abortion, fox-hunting or even political ease — in a way that would previously have fallen foul of British electoral law.

That opens the floodgates to the targeting of high-profile opponents such as Tony Blair. The Labour leader has said that he is personally against abortion, but does not believe it should be made illegal. He has abstained more times than he has voted on the issue in the Commons, though not as often as Mr Major. In Scotland, Cardinal Hume's counterpart, Cardinal Thomas Winning, has criticised Mr Blair's personal stance as "washing his hands" of the issue.

In reality, both main party leaders take a pragmatic view and backed the reduction from 28 to 24 weeks of pregnancy in which legal abortion is allowed, a change dictated by changing medical technology but pressed by the pro-life lobby which failed to reduce it to 18 weeks. Dr Spink, an MP since 1992, yesterday defended the Prime Minister. "He's told the pro-lifers and the pro-abortionists where he stands and he's stuck to his guns. "He's always followed his conscience, which is his policy on this matter. So he has total integrity on it. Mr Blair on the other hand, has said one thing and done another."

opponents who can say that only 500 people in the constituency are concerned about it."

Other active pro-life Tories, including Elizabeth Peacock, MP for Batley and Spen, are known to share that fear. As well as the Pro-Life Alliance's plans to field 50 candidates, single issue campaign tactics are likely to be employed by the Referendum Party, which is hoping to use Sir James Goldsmith's fortune to oppose Euro-federalism. There is also the prospect that both pro and anti-gun lobbies will target MPs.

None can expect to win seats, but they could tilt the result in a handful of marginal seats. Pro-lifers immediately hailed it as a significant development. But the editor of the Catholic Herald, Harry Coen, warned that in a tight election the issue might acquire "a preponderance of weight far beyond what it actually deserves".

Though his spokesman later said the cardinal was "not telling people who to vote for" he stressed that Catholics might find it difficult to vote for strongly pro-choice candidates. The cardinal reiterated his message in an interview in today's Daily Telegraph. His remarks immediately reawakened political passions on the subject, with Peter Garret, research director of the Pro-Life Alliance, claiming that the issue "should be able to swing a few key marginal constituencies".

The alliance is threatening to field 50 candidates, enough to gain it a party political broadcast. At Westminster, the cardinal's remarks produced a mixed response among anti-abortion Conservative MPs. Dr Robert Spink, MP for Casle Point and a committed pro-lifer, said he would be unlikely to vote for a pro-choice Tory candidate. "That's my choice. I wouldn't advise anyone else how they should vote."

RING IN THE NEW YEAR.

When it comes to giving away free minutes, Mercury runs rings round everyone else. For a start, we don't just limit them to Christmas. Instead, with Mercury SmartCall or UK-Call, you can enjoy free minutes 365 days a year. Which could add up to 2 hours of free national weekend minutes every month. It's all part of our commitment to provide you with better prices. Ring on Freecall 0500 500 366 and start saving now.

A CABLE & WIRELESS COMPANY

Mercury are entitled to your MR at the Mercury National Weekend Rate. All calls include a 1.5p connection charge. For a quarterly fee you can add SmartCall (£6.75) or UK-Call (£4.75) to your BT line. All prices quoted include VAT.

MERCURY COMMUNICATIONS LTD
RFD004 14

Mrs Danvers is sinister manipulator and broken but vengeful woman. No female — bluff sister, petulant grandmother, frivolous Bishop's wife — is spared the author's scorn; yet the men — a murderer, a blackmailer and official perverters of justice — are all let off.

Up the twisted garden path to Manderley with Veronica Horwell

G2 page 14

A big decline in the need for air bases has led to many being sold off. David Fairhall examines the cases of Farnborough and Bentwaters

Bentwaters airbase planned redevelopment

Conservation battle looms over airfield site

Clockwise from above: The airship Astra Torres leaving its shed at Farnborough in 1913; the 24ft wind tunnel built in 1935; the airship shed to be relocated as part of an air and space sciences centre; and plans for the Bentwaters airbase, in Suffolk

A CONFLICT between conservation and commercial redevelopment is looming at Britain's oldest airfield, Farnborough in Hampshire, the setting for this country's first powered flight by Samuel Cody in 1908, and home of the biennial Farnborough air show. The Ministry of Defence wants to raise cash by selling the airfield and the historic buildings of Farnborough's Royal Aircraft Establishment (RAE) which are at one end of the runway. The RAE has become part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Establishment in new accommodation at the other end. The Society of British Aerospace Companies wants to keep using Farnborough for the air show, and insists there is no other suitable site. But the Civil Aviation Authority has warned that if Farnborough becomes a civil airfield, historic buildings at the end of the runway might have to be demolished for safety reasons. A conservation group called the Farnborough Air Sciences Trust (Fast) is determined to restore some of the buildings as a showcase for British aviation technology...

including the wind tunnel with its prominent clock tower, built in 1935 to test aircraft designs. The tunnel is still operational and capable of earning its keep, but its lower projects into the runway approach flightpath — something the CAA might find unacceptable where the MOD did not. The trust also wants to preserve a lattice-framed airship shed, the earliest Royal Flying Corps hangar and many of the other research workshops that mark the progress of British aviation from kites to Concorde. But Laurence Peskett, one of Fast's founders, emphasises that a proposed air and space sciences centre would be much more than a museum. It would be commercially led, he says, providing a permanent showcase for the latest technological developments. Taken together, the two elements would be "an inspiration for a new generation" in aerospace. A detailed feasibility study by consultants Arup Economics and Planning is expected by the end of January.

Property group in third attempt to develop Suffolk base AFTER two failed attempts since the US Air Force pulled out in 1993, the MOD has signed a provisional contract with the property group Bentwaters Investments to sell the 1,000-acre Bentwaters airbase in Suffolk. The sale is conditional on the Suffolk Coastal district council's approval of the outline planning proposals submitted in advance by the MOD. The developers have declined to reveal their detailed intentions until the council announces its decision in February. The MOD's first taker for the huge Suffolk base was the Maharishi Foundation, which proposed to establish a "university of natural law", but that fell through. The relief of local people who found that the shopping and other facilities they had hoped for would not be available. The Chris Parker group was next in the frame, only to drop out in its turn. Now over Tony Hunt, one of the men behind Bentwaters Investments, was previously one of Mr Parker's financial backers. The outline plan within which the developers must work is clear from the MOD proposals. The USAF housing and recreational facilities on the north west side of the A1153 Woodbridge-Tunstall road would become a new village, the airbase administration blocks on the other side of the road would become a commercial "employment area". The hangars and bunkers on the far side of the runway would either be demolished or landscaped to provide forest and heathland with public access through footpaths. The runway itself would be shortened by digging up both ends, with the option for some sort of flying preserved.

Sinn Fein councillor told of death risk

Party leaders warned to be alert to loyalist assassination attempts

David Starrock, Irish Correspondent

A SINN Fein councillor in Belfast has been warned of imminent danger from a loyalist assassination attempt. The Royal Ulster Constabulary told Alex Maskey on Saturday that it had information that the attempt would soon be made, and warned other leading Sinn Fein members to be alert to loyalist attacks. Also on Saturday, Liam Duffy, Sinn Fein's director of elections, spotted a booby-trap explosive device which had apparently fallen from under his car on the Gobe-na-see estate, Londonderry. Army bomb disposal experts defused the device, which was the second attack on republicans in six days. It is believed that the Ulster Freedom Fighters planted it, although no group has claimed responsibility. Eight days ago Eddie Cope-land, aged 26, a senior north Belfast republican, was injured when a device exploded under his car in the Ardoyne district. He is in hospital awaiting a skin graft. The attacks follow the IRA's gun attack on December 20 which wounded an RUC officer guarding a Unionist politician as he visited his son at a children's hospital. Officially the ceasefire announced by the Combined Loyalist Military Command in October 1994 is still in operation, but the clear breaches will increase pressure on the Government to ban loyalist political representatives from the Stormont talks on the future of Northern Ireland. Sinn Fein said the claim in the Sunday Times that Gerry Adams and Martin McGuinness were reappointed at a recent convention as full voting members of the IRA's ruling council was an old lie. A spokesman Richard McAuley said: "We have this history, which is two months old, being reappointed as the same old lie, and the timing is not coincidental. "Somebody has an objective. It will probably lead to further attacks on Sinn Fein members. They might even get killed. What is the British agenda behind all of this?" Meanwhile, it is thought that an injured IRA bomb-maker is on the run after a planned attack on security forces went wrong. Police found suspected bomb-making components at a west Belfast house after an explosion. Detectives think a firing mechanism for a device exploded in a house in the Whitecroft area on Friday night. The RUC suspects that any injured man has been smuggled to a safe house in the Irish Republic. Six men arrested in a follow-up operation were still being questioned yesterday.

News in brief

Food poisoning claims 16th victim

THE E. coli outbreak in Scotland claimed the life of a 16th pensioner at the weekend. Tomorrow the Scottish Office will receive the initial recommendations of a scientific inquiry into what is now the world's second worst such outbreak of food poisoning. Yesterday Lanarkshire health board confirmed the death of a woman aged 91 in Monklands hospital, Airdrie, on Saturday. At the request of relatives, the woman, from Netherthorn near Wishaw, has not been named. The health board said the woman had contracted the illness after eating meat bought from John M Barr & Son, the Wishaw butcher's shop at the centre of the outbreak. — Alison Daniels

'Marriage of convenience'

THE Prince of Wales's sense of duty to produce an heir led him to make an ill-founded and loveless "marriage of convenience" according to a new book by Zaida West-Meads, a former spokeswoman for the marriage guidance charity Relate. The claims in the relationship were visible from the start, Mrs West-Meads claims, pointing out how the prince, asked if he was in love during the engagement press conference in 1981, replied: "Whatever love is."

Rapist's description issued

POLICE yesterday released a description of a man who is wanted for raping a 58-year-old mother and her nine-year-old daughter after breaking into their bedroom. The attack took place in the early hours of Boxing Day as the pair slept in a ground floor flat in Northolt, north London, belonging to a relative they were visiting for Christmas. The rapist, who later made off with cash, was described as white, in his early 20s, of slim build and clean shaven, with blond hair and chiselled features.

Man found dead on pub roof

A MAN who apparently vanished early on Christmas Day was yesterday found dead on the roof of the pub where he had been drinking during the previous evening. The body of Jason Andrew, 27, was found on a roof at the Clarke's Arms, near his home in Hyde, Greater Manchester. Police believe he was the victim of a fall.

Illegal immigrant suspects up

THE number of alleged illegal immigrants detected in the UK increased by 40 per cent last year, according to Home Office statistics. Illegal entry action was initiated against 10,381 people in 1995, compared with 7,430 the previous year. However, only 3,020 of those people were removed or voluntarily left the country, a 7 per cent decrease on the previous year's figure. The annual report of the Home Office's Immigration and Nationality Directorate noted that the largest single category of illegal entrant remained those who gained entry by deceiving an immigration officer on arrival — 85 per cent of those detected in 1995.

Lottery winners

EIGHT jackpot winners won £1,225,265 each in Saturday's National Lottery draw. Winning numbers in the last draw of 1996 were 8, 10, 20, 27, 31 and 39, with the bonus ball 30.

GP fundholders demand better Labour deal

David Brindle, Social Services Correspondent

LEADERS of fundholding doctors will this week tell Chris Smith, Labour's shadow health secretary, that he has not moved far enough to make them drop their hostility to his policy programme. The executive committee of the National Association of Fundholding Practices has voted without opposition to insist that Labour must allow existing fundholders to keep their own budgets for purchasing hospital and community health services for their patients. The move will come as no surprise to Labour, which thought it unlikely the NAFF would fall in line. Party strategists believe, however, that many of the 16,000 fundholders are not as militant as the association's leadership. Earlier this month, Mr Smith watered down Labour's commitment to scrap fundholding, and set out a vision of "locally purchasing", bearing strong resemblance to existing pilot schemes by which groups of "total" fundholders buy all health care for an area. He went so far as to suggest that individual practices could keep their own budgets if other GPs in the area agreed to them doing so. The NAFF immediately said these concessions looked insufficient. In its formal response this week, it will reassert that nothing less than a guarantee of practice-based budgets will deter it from campaigning against Labour's policy in the run-up to the general election. By April, fundholders will represent 58 per cent of the English population and a concerted campaign by them against Labour could undermine the party's support on the health issue. Some NAFF leaders have for more than a year been warning that fundholders could go fully or semi-private if Labour takes away their control of budgets. However, other primary health care workers are now warning that Mr Smith risks alienating them because he has moved so far to appease GPs. Dr David Tod, an NAFF executive member and immediate past president of the association, said yesterday there was still room for compromise with Labour if it agreed to leave existing fundholders alone until the system had been independently evaluated. "My personal view is that it would be politic for both the Labour Party and the association to say we will allow fundholding to continue for a period until it has been fully assessed by an outside health research body," Dr Tod said.

Labour makes rich pickings attack over foreign investment 'miracle'

Michael White on figures showing growth of mergers and takeovers

LABOUR last night launched an attack on a pillar of the "Tory economic miracle" when it revealed that a growing share of the much-trumpeted inward investment in Britain arises simply from mergers and takeovers of firms by foreign companies. In 1995 nearly a fifth of inward investment was accounted for by the purchase of two privatised electricity utilities, Seaboard and South Western Electricity, by larger American rivals for $1.6 billion and $1.1 billion respectively, Stephen Byers, a Labour employment spokesman, declared. Once BMW's purchase of Rover from British Aerospace and other acquisitions were taken into account, some 60 per cent of 1995 inward investment, as defined by the Treasury's "pink book" on UK balance of payments, arose from such takeovers — compared with 15 per cent in 1985. Since ministers, led by John Major himself, repeatedly stress the importance of Britain's flexible, low-wage economy, free from the restrictions of the European Union social chapter, in winning vital investment from

Case 1

SWEB, the old South Western Electricity Board, was the first regional electricity company to be taken over by an American power group, writes Ian King. Snapped up for $1.1 billion in September 1995 by the Atlanta-based Southern Company, Sweb has since announced plans to cut more than 650 jobs — almost a fifth of the workforce. After the takeover the Americans wasted no time in wielding the job axe, making Sweb one of the first regional electricity companies to undertake a heavy redundancy programme. But aside from the job cuts, Sweb's remaining 4,000 employees have since suffered further worry. In April, Southern said it was prepared to sell up to half its stake in Sweb.

Case 2

DESPITE Labour's claim that inward investment has destroyed British jobs, foreign money has in some cases helped maintain manufacturing in this country, writes Roger Coase. BMW came to the aid of the last indigenous manufacturer, now named Rover, after buying it from British Aerospace for $900 million in 1984. By the end of the century BMW expects to have spent another $3 billion on improving productivity, but in typical German fashion is not seeking a quick return. Rover will not produce profits until 1999. Recently BMW announced a £400 million engine plant in the Midlands, employing 1,500 and maybe three times that in supplier companies. And BMW's support has protected up to 40,000 jobs throughout the Rover Group.

Mr Byers, MP for Walsend, argued that ministerial speeches always invoked images of inward investment as "companies from Japan and Germany setting up factories on green field sites. It is a lot more complicated than that and not necessarily good news, despite what the Government would have us believe." In a statement last night he predicted that the 1996 investment figures would confirm the trend which he had observed from parliamentary answers by the Department of Trade and Industry. "The Tories constantly claim that the UK attracts inward investment because we have no minimum wage and have opted out of the social chapter," the statement said. "These figures show that such claims are misleading and are simply deceiving the British people. The reality is that the majority of inward investment comes from foreign investors making rich pickings from what's left of British industry." In Tory MPs rather more, Mr Byers also questioned the price at which the utilities — denationalised on highly favourable terms — are now being acquired by overseas rivals. "Our nation's assets are being sold abroad, with profits being siphoned off overseas, and the Government applauds this as inward investment. What a misuse of the English language."

the US and Asia, the battleground is an important one. In some years this investment has accounted for 40 per cent of the EU total. Tory campaign strategists were quick last night to denounce the claim as wrong and "depressingly Old Labour". Business investment trends were far more complex than the pink book's list of finan-

Coup trying

Magic export

Police see identity remains

Handwritten Arabic text: ١٥٦٥ من الامل

Broken ice and freezing water defeat rescuers

Couple die in lake trying to save dog

Alan Watkins

A COUPLE died yesterday when they fell into a frozen lake in Aveley, Essex, trying to rescue their pet Labrador. The dog eventually made its own way to safety, and waited on the bank as 50 rescuers sought to save William and Jill Willis, both aged 68.

Another couple, in their 40s, who waded into the broken ice and freezing water to try to pull the Willises out, were taken to Oldchurch hospital in Romford suffering from suspected hypothermia. Later their condition had much improved, and last night they were expected to be allowed home.

The accident happened just after 5am yesterday at Belhus Park, where the lake was covered by ice up to 2inches thick.

Tara, a three-year-old black Labrador, was being taken for a walk by the Willises, who lived in Uxminster. The dog ran on to the ice and appeared to get into difficulties.

Mr Willis scrambled down the bank after her, but as he walked across the ice it gave way beneath him. His wife went to his help, but met the same fate.

The second couple risked their own lives trying to drag them to safety, but were beaten by the intense cold.

After park officials had raised the alarm, fire fighters using special floating boards succeeded in lifting Mrs Willis from the water after 45 minutes. Paramedics restarted her heart and she was airlifted to the Royal London hospital. She died shortly after arrival.

Police divers found Mr Willis two hours later in 12 feet of water. Ambulance staff tried for nearly an hour to resuscitate him before a doctor pronounced him dead.

While the passers-by made their rescue attempt, Tara struggled ashore and stood barking on the bank. A fireman said she was treated by a vet for hypothermia but was last night said to be fit and well in local kennels — still wearing the red bow that her owners attached to her collar for Christmas.

"I suspect that the fate of both husband and wife was sealed within 30 seconds of them trying to get across the lake," said Barry Cable, Essex rescue assistant divisional officer.

"One easily understands how much the dog mattered to them, but it is tragic that they sacrificed their own lives for her.

"Ice-covered ponds are absolutely treacherous, with no guarantee that they will stand the weight of a human."

Stephen Willis, one of the couple's two sons, said last night: "It has been a terrible shock, but at least they are together. They were a very loving couple, and Tara was like a third child to them."

The other couple, who were out walking their own dog, asked the authorities not to disclose their identities.

An Essex police spokeswoman said: "It would seem the sort of act for which an award would be appropriate. The couple came very close to losing their own lives."

"It was an extremely brave act, but they cannot come to terms with the fact that through no fault of their own they were unable to help. They just had to watch as the couple got into even more difficulties, and then save themselves."

Fire-fighters use special boards to get out on to the frozen lake at Belhus Park, Aveley, Essex, where the ice was two inches thick. PHOTOGRAPH: JOHN McLENNAN

Magic mushroom 'export' drive

An MP wants Wales to profit from one of its natural resources. Alex Bellos reports

A LABOUR MP suggested yesterday that Welsh youngsters be given grants to export magic mushrooms.

Paul Flynn, MP for Newport West, called the hallucinogenic fungi "the truffles of Wales", which could be marketed around the world. Mushrooms from his constituency can command a price of $2,000 a kilo in the streets of Amsterdam.

Although mushrooms containing the active ingredient psilocybin are legal if picked and eaten wild, they become class A drugs — the same status as heroin, cocaine and ecstasy — if they are "prepared", for instance mixed in soup, tea or cakes.

Mr Flynn said in an interview for SAC's Welsh language news programme Y Byd Ar Bedwar: "It is perfectly legal to send them fresh from Wales; nobody is poisoned by them, nobody is addicted. Why on earth not exploit the market and get the Welsh Development Agency to give a grant for a few young people to set up a business?"

Wales produces some of the most powerful mushrooms in the world, according to connoisseurs of hallucinogens.

Nigel Evans, the Conservative MP for Ribbles Valley, whose knee-jerk

Paul Flynn: 'My comments illustrate idiosyncrasy of law.'

attacks on drug culture are about as frequent as Mr Flynn's calls for liberalisation, immediately criticised the Welsh MP for "encouraging people to take drugs and sell them".

But Mr Flynn replied: "My comments illustrate the idiosyncrasy of the present law... Viewers of the programme will see that I have repeated my call that all drugs are dangerous and the use of all drugs should be discouraged. Magic mushrooms are among the least harmful. No one has ever died after using them but 100,000 die every year as a result of tobacco use."

He said Mr Evans sold cigarettes at his shop in Swansea. "He profits from a drug that shortens the lives of a quarter of its users by 20 years."

A spokesman for Tony Blair said Mr Flynn's views on drugs were not shared by the Labour Party.

Police seek to identify cremated remains

Geoffrey Gibbs

FORENSIC scientists were yesterday seeking to confirm the identity of cremated human remains found in the boot of a car in which a Devon-based businessman shot himself to death in front of armed police officers.

As police carried out a detailed search of the farm where Derek Levon, aged 61, killed himself on Friday, the detective leading the investigation said he doubted Mr Levon's wife Polly would be found.

He said a suicide note dated Boxing Day and posted to Tiverton police station indicated that both Mr and Mrs Levon planned to commit suicide.

He said Mr Levon, who worked in London in the electronics business, had cited "various reasons" for the planned suicide, but had made no mention of business worries or of the cancer from which his wife was suffering.

Officers went after the Levon home at Silverton, near Exeter, was destroyed by arson on Friday. When police arrived they discovered Mr Levon sitting in a car with the engine running. He was holding a gun to his head and trying to kill himself with exhaust fumes.

An officer persuaded him to switch off the engine but an hour and a half of negotiations ended with Mr Levon shooting himself.

'Only one fingerprint' found at Saudi murder scene

POLICE in Saudi Arabia have found a fingerprint from only one of two British nurses facing a murder charge in their alleged victim's flat, it was claimed yesterday.

According to the London-based Saudi newspaper Al-Hayat, Lucy McLaughlan, 41, aged 31, from Dundee, and 41-year-old Deborah Perry, from the Midlands, have confessed to killing Australian colleague Yvonne Gifford, aged 55, at her flat at the King Fahd military hospital in Dhahran, where all three worked.

But in a report yesterday, the paper claimed police had only found one fingerprint from one of the two nurses in Miss Gifford's flat.

All other prints were said to be the victim's. Al-Hayat quoted police officers as saying one of the nurses confessed to the killing immediately after their arrest on December 20, while the other admitted her part in the crime two days later.

British officials refused to discuss the case or comment on whether the two nurses had made confessions. The Foreign Office in London also declined to comment.

Yesterday's report came just hours after Saudi's ambassador to Britain, Dr Ghazi Alqosabi, pledged the two nurses would receive a fair trial.

British officials are still trying to secure legal representation for the two nurses and are expected to visit them in prison today or tomorrow.

don't tell me, tell me how.

No smoking here. No smoking there.

For crying out loud, does anybody realise how hard it is? How much you'd love to quit but don't know how? Nicotinell do; and our nicotine patches can help.

You see, many smokers who try quitting on willpower alone find it difficult because they're addicted to nicotine. And the moment you deny yourself nicotine, your body physically craves it.

Our solution? Wean yourself off nicotine with the Nicotinell patch programme.

It's a 3 month programme (could be 2 if you smoke less than 20 a day) consisting of large, medium and small patches.

They feed your body's craving for nicotine, gradually reducing the amounts until you no longer need it.

Don't worry, tar in cigarettes is a main cause of lung cancer, not nicotine.

Every day you wear a patch on your arm or body.

It's designed to deliver a lower dose of nicotine than you'd get from a cigarette, but higher than the point where physical cravings are too much to bear. Furthermore, unlike some patches, ours last a full 24 hours.

So they help beat that desperate desire for the first smoke of the day.

Once you've finished the small patches you've finished the course.

Just think, you could now be a non-smoker.

Perhaps it only needed someone to tell you how.

ALWAYS READ THE LABEL. CONSULT YOUR DOCTOR. THIS MEDICINE IS PART OF THE CURE COURSE.

Peru's Marxist rebels free 20 more hostages from embassy after talks with minister

Hint of hope in Lima crisis

Jane Diaz-Limaco in Lima

TALKS between Peru's government and leftwing Tupac Amaru rebels produced the first tentative signs of progress in the Lima hostage crisis with the release of 20 more hostages and an apparent easing of rebel demands.

The residence on Saturday of the government's designated negotiator, education minister Domingo Palerm, brought some hope. In the first confirmation that the government was talking to the rebels, Mr Palerm entered the rebel-held building. His negotiations with the rebel leader, Néstor Cerpa, lasted three-and-a-half hours. Mr Palerm later said they had made "advances" towards solving the crisis. Shortly afterwards, the rebels released 20 hostages in what they termed a "goodwill gesture", maintaining an effort to convince Peruvians that they differ from the country's other rebel group, Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path), in considering violence only as a final resort.

The group of freed hostages, dressed in suits and clutching plastic bags, lingered by the stately columns of the residence to wave goodbye to those left behind. Among the first to be freed was Juan Enrique Pendavis, the president of the Peruvian exporters' society, who read a statement signed by Mr Cerpa. It protested that the government continued to confuse the Tupac Amaru group with Shining Path. Mr Cerpa's statement said his commando was willing to negotiate its withdrawal and that the path towards a lasting peace should start with a revision of the harsh prison conditions in which rebel inmates have been held for years. One analyst, Raúl González, said there were definite signs of progress. He said the rebels had apparently dropped their previous demand for the release of Tupac Amaru prisoners. This has apparently been substituted by that of improving prison conditions. The freeing of the latest group of hostages — who include the ambassadors of the Dominican Republic and Malaysia, 10 ethnic Japanese businessmen and seven Peruvian officials — seems to have kindled hopes of a peaceful solution. However, a letter from Japanese hostages to Japan's government said the situation inside the residence was becoming more dangerous and that the risks to the remaining hostages were "getting worse every day". A Japanese embassy official in Lima denied reports that some companies have been seeking a way out within the ground rules imposed by Peru's president, Alberto Fujimori, who has refused to free any jailed guerrillas but has offered guarantees if they lay down their arms. The diplomats say that Lima might offer to create a commission to review prison conditions as part of a deal, while the captors are likely to demand safe passage, either to their Peruvian jungle stronghold or a friendly country such as Cuba.

Yesterday, the Lima newspaper La República published a letter which it claimed was signed by at least 18 prominent hostages, including Peru's foreign minister, Francisco Tudela. It proposed that the rebel commando be flown into exile in a neutral country. The letter also called for all Tupac Amaru prisoners, estimated to number about 400, to be placed in a single institution under the supervision of the United Nations and the International Red Cross. Peace talks should take place with rebel leaders along the lines of recent talks in Guatemala, and aim at reaching an accord that would allow Tupac Amaru to lay down its arms and become a legal organisation, it said.

Domingo Palermo, Peru's education minister, persuaded rebels holding the Lima compound to make their 'goodwill gesture' on Saturday

German upper house threatens to block EMU

Ian Traynor in Bonn

GERMANY'S upper house of parliament could block the country's participation in the single European currency, an opposition figure threatened at the weekend. Warning that European monetary union could cost the country as much as the hugely expensive process of German unification, Gerhard Schröder, the premier of Lower Saxony, told the government it could not take opposition support for the euro for granted. Mr Schröder's Social Democrats control the upper house in Bonn in opposition to Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrat-Liberal coalition's control of the lower house. His threat was denounced as cheap demagoguery by government figures, who accused Mr Schröder of seeking to sow panic among a public worried about trading the reliable German mark for the untested euro. German unification has come at a cost of more than 1,000 billion marks ($390 billion) in transfers from west to east since 1990. The euphoria of unity has evaporated. Mr Schröder touched a raw nerve by warning that European monetary union could mean a replay of the costly process of rebuilding east Germany. "If the conditions are not right, you can't approve of [EMU]," Mr Schröder told the weekly FOCUS magazine. He could not rule out that the Social Democrats "would torpedo the euro's introduction in the Bundesrat [upper house]". Theo Waigel, the finance minister charged with Mr Schröder's policy as a "pre-emptive monetary adventure" that would plunge Europe into a crisis. Wilhelm Hankel, a retired Bonn banker and economics professor, said the single currency could turn Europe into "a social and political desert". He predicted company bankruptcies after the currencies are merged. Wolfgang Schäuble, the number two in Mr Kohl's Christian Democrats, said: "European monetary union is a huge step on the way to [European] political union." In an interview in today's Spiegel magazine, he hints at government strategy in the new year on deciding who would join the single currency, and when. Membership by the January 1999 launch date would not be "too big", he said. But in the three years envisaged before euro coins and banknotes replace national currencies, other countries would join. In the framework of the first phase of monetary union, there can be different solutions. If a certain country has not yet met the criteria, but is on the right road, it can just join a year later. "The three years of the first phase of monetary union offer all those making serious efforts the chance to join before the euro notes are in everyday circulation."

Wild West's bad old days return for wandering bison

Park rangers are being turned into hunters, reports Martin Walker in Washington

THE famed bison of the American plains, once hunted almost to extinction, are under threat again after a lawsuit brought by a Church-owned ranch for a mass slaughter by rangers in a national park. Environmentalists are up in arms about the planned cull at Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming, which follows claims by the Church Universal and Triumphant that wandering bison, the symbol of the old West, are causing disease in its cattle. The Sierra Club is appealing against a judge's decision to allow the slaughter by park rangers, who are identified by their bison badges. "For them to trap and slaughter these animals is a fundamental distortion of their mission," said Jim Angell, one of the club's lawyers. The Church, which runs a large cattle ranch in Montana, just across the state line from Yellowstone, claims that its cattle are at risk from brucellosis, a bacterial disease which is carried by the wandering bison. The Church also says that it faces material loss from damage to its fences, and has even a legal order that all wandering bison, not just diseased ones, should be killed as they leave the park. Although feared extinct for many years, bison were found in small herds in the remote mountains of Yellowstone Park more than 80 years ago. Their numbers have recovered to about 3,500, and they are no longer listed as an endangered species. More than 600 bison are now moving from the high ground to the park's northern border and then on to Montana, using trails through the snow created by the park rangers to facilitate snowmobile travel. "Our preference is to let nature take its course, but we are responding to the concerns of the state of Montana," said a park spokeswoman, Marsha Karle. The original proposal, to let rangers and hunters draw lots for the right to shoot the bison, was dropped because of fears that the public would be outraged. Last year, when 200 wandering bison were shot by park rangers, some saw them being killed near their homes raised a public outcry. The rangers have in the past tried using helicopters and horses to herd the animals back to the park. But the park boundaries bear no relation to the feeding pattern of the bison, which usually head for the low-lying pastures outside the park as the winter deepens. The bison will now be trapped and shipped to slaughterhouses, and their meat donated to Indian tribes, soup kitchens and other local charities.

Serb police block 50,000 marchers in Belgrade

Reuter in Belgrade

SERBIAN security police blocked a march by 50,000 people in Belgrade yesterday in the 42nd successive day of pro-democracy demonstrations in Yugoslavia. The protest column was interrupted when it poured into the main pedestrian precinct after fiery speeches by leaders of the Zajedno (Together) opposition coalition in Republic Square. The police were enforcing a ban on street marches imposed by the ruling Socialist Party (SPS) after a clash between Zajedno protesters and government loyalists brought into Belgrade to intimidate the opposition. A Zajedno supporter was reportedly trampled to death by comrades fleeing a police charge. Police created two cordons to box in demonstrators on the Knez Mihailova pedestrian lane yesterday. Protesters reacted, as before, by walking in circles as if they were imprisoned. They also shouted "murderers" and "dogs" at police. Up to 250,000 people on some occasions have demonstrated in Belgrade and other Serbian towns daily, in a campaign to reverse the SPS' annulment of municipal elections won by the Zajedno bloc. Zajedno, later backed by the findings of an Organisation of Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) mission, accused the SPS of vote-rigging. It wants its victories reinstated in 14 cities including Belgrade. The SPS swept other municipalities. Western governments have warned President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia that Serbia will forfeit financial aid unless he concedes SPS electoral defeat. Opposition leaders said they received an open letter to Mr Milosevic, his army chief, and university students in the second-largest city, Nis, from representatives of several military units. Two third tyrants, page 9

'600 arrests' since shooting of Uday

IRAC's former intelligence chief said Iraqi authorities had arrested more than 600 army, party and government officials following an assassination attempt on the eldest son of President Saddam Hussein. The arrests were made within what is called in Iraq an emergency plan which stipulates the detention of all suspected figures within the army, government and party. Waqf al-Sameral said. Authorities said Uday, aged 32, was shot by gunmen on December 12 while driving in the capital. An opposition group claimed three of its operatives drove a car disguised as a security agent's close enough to Uday to hurl a grenade and then take him with machine-gun fire as he struggled to escape. A representative of the Iraq-gum fire as he struggled to escape. A representative of the Iraq-gum fire as he struggled to escape. Uday has since been shown on television greeting well-wishers from his hospital bed. "Those arrested included Staff Colonel Thaeer Hussam al-Din, head of Uday's special bureau, and several other high-ranking officers from the security forces," said Mr Sameral, an active opposition figure based in Syria since he was defected in 1994. He said Qasbi, Saddam's second son, had personally interrogated many officers, including Staff Major-General Saleh Younsif Seal, commander of the Seventh Infantry Division. Mr Sameral said the body of Colonel Abdullah al-Douri — a security officer who is also co-ordinator of the Iraq Olympic Committee headed by Uday — was found several days after the assassination attempt. — Agencies, Damascus and Kuwait.

Suu Kyi leaves home

THE Burmese opposition leader, Aung San Suu Kyi, attended a wedding celebration and visited a museum honouring her assassinated father yesterday, but Burmese authorities said she would need clearance to leave her tightly guarded compound. Officials indicated that Ms Suu Kyi, confined to her home since a series of student demonstrations earlier this month, could leave her house "on a case-by-case basis" after a security review to approve her requests to go out. Government security cars will accompany her. But Ms Suu Kyi failed at the weekend for the fifth week in succession to appear at a Rangoon intersection, where she has spoken to supporters in the past. A crowd of 120 people waited for an hour, then dispersed peacefully. The 1991 Nobel peace prize winner, the target of an increasing crackdown by the military government, left her home for the first time in three weeks on Friday, to visit the grave of her mother on the eighth anniversary of her death. — AP, Rangoon.

Call to ban concerts

FIVE Islamist Kuwaiti deputies are seeking to ban concerts and fashion shows in the Muslim state, a parliamentary official said yesterday. "The bill places a full ban on public concerts and fashion shows," the official said. "It stipulates that violators of the ban should face up to a six-month prison term, a fine of at least 5,000 dinars (£10,000) and the closure of the facility used for holding a concert or a fashion show," the official said. The bill requires the approval of parliament and the emir, Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, before it becomes law. Islamists have attacked the government for allowing concerts after a five-year ban following the 1990-91 Iraqi occupation of Kuwait. Islamists object to women singing for male audiences, or vice-versa. Recent Western-style fashion shows have also drawn criticism. Kuwait already bans public dancing and alcohol. Discotheques were closed in the 1980s. — Reuter, Kuwait.

Nigeria frees hostages

ALL 28 hostages held on an offshore barge by Nigerian workers demanding big pay rises have been released unharmed, a Philippine diplomat said. The hostages, who were held for five days before being released, were all foreigners — 10 Filipinos, nine Frenchmen, five Indians, two Britons, one Lebanese and one Belgian. They were taken off the barge yesterday by the navy and brought to the naval base in Calabar, Hermes Dorado, consul-general of the Philippine embassy in Lagos, said. They had been held hostage by 60 Nigerian workers on the barge, about 30 miles offshore from the oil-producing town of Ekot, since December 23. Mr Dorado said the Nigerians had also been evacuated by the navy to its base, but he did not know the outcome of negotiations to end the siege. The dispute involved a French oil services company identified as NTFM that employed the workers on its barge, the WB-82, which transports oil from onshore fields to tankers. — Reuter, Lagos.

Algerian militants on attack

MILITANTS cut off the roads and telephone lines to Ain Defla, a village south of Algiers, and killed 28 people there with long knives and axes yesterday, hours before a car bomb exploded near Algiers, the government said. The militants said they belonged to the Armed Islamic Group, which has claimed responsibility for many similar attacks in recent years. The attack came hours before a car bomb exploded in El Harrach (above), a suburb of Algiers, injuring at least 20 people in the third such bombing in the past week, authorities said. Hospital sources put the number of wounded at 35. In the past week in Algiers, two other car bomb attacks have killed 13 people and injured more than 150. — AP, Algiers.

Bomb attack on Tibet office

A BOMB exploded outside a government office in Lhasa, capital of Tibet. Local Chinese authorities yesterday described the Christmas Eve blast as "an appalling act of terrorism," radio reports said. "The bombing... was an organised, planned, and targeted counter-revolutionary bombing incident staged by the Dalai Lama clique," the regional Communist Party committee said according to the radio report. The Lhasa-based Tibet Information Network said five people were wounded. — Reuter, Beijing.

"Go to Thomtons, Waitrose, Marks," she commanded. "They'll run out. We must have some in the house." The pressure was on. I bought more. Not enough. Mother panicked. "Buy stolen," she begged.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN LIFE AFTER DEATH?
We do. Kidney research saves lives. So do legacies.
NATIONAL KIDNEY RESEARCH FUND
3 Archers Court, Slindley Chase, Harrogate, West Yorkshire HG1 5EG
Telephone 01430 454828
Registered Charity No. 252952

Russian manual warns children the new enemy may lurk even in a friend's house

David Hearst in Moscow

ONCE upon a time, when the enemy was a dot on the radar screen, the advice to Soviet schoolchildren was clear. Five-year-olds were taught how to recognise the profile of an American B2 bomber in the sky, or a British Vulcan. There were also helpful hints on what they should do if they saw the flash of a nuclear explosion. Today, those civil defence lessons — called Grazdanskaya Oborona or Grob (meaning coffin) — have been replaced by a terrifying manual on personal security, including the rooms are arranged and doors, how the locks work, where the telephones are, and where the neighbours are, because you must be ready to leave the flat at any moment. And what to do if taken hostage: "It's very important to observe personal hygiene and cleanliness as far as the situation permits, to do physical training to calm yourself and to relax using meditation." Natasha, aged 15, said of the new school book: "Reading the manual, I have the feeling that I am surrounded by enemies. Thank God it is not so." Russians are fed a steady diet of disaster including television programmes such as Catastrophe of the Week.

German upper house threatens to block EMU

GERMANY'S upper house of parliament could block the country's participation in the single European currency, an opposition figure threatened at the weekend. Warning that European monetary union could cost the country as much as the hugely expensive process of German unification, Gerhard Schröder, the premier of Lower Saxony, told the government it could not take opposition support for the euro for granted. Mr Schröder's Social Democrats control the upper house in Bonn in opposition to Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrat-Liberal coalition's control of the lower house. His threat was denounced as cheap demagoguery by government figures, who accused Mr Schröder of seeking to sow panic among a public worried about trading the reliable German mark for the untested euro. German unification has come at a cost of more than 1,000 billion marks ($390 billion) in transfers from west to east since 1990. The euphoria of unity has evaporated. Mr Schröder touched a raw nerve by warning that European monetary union could mean a replay of

Caliba
forces push furthe
north Loggin
Beth Mydams
Singapore

طوكيو من الامم

Tokyo Diary

Andrew Higgins

NOW have an inkling of how fellow newspaperman Clark Kent must have felt each time he stepped from a telephone booth dressed in blue tights, shiny plastic boots and red cape. Ridiculous, certainly. But also amazed at the difference a quick change of clothes can make. My own metamorphosis was considerably more modest but still made a big impression on the fastidiously fashionable, conscious staff of Japan Railway's Kyoto-Tokyo express. I went into the train's toilet a fare-dodging scoundrel and came out, not perhaps a super hero, but at least no longer a suspect.

In the space of about 45 seconds, as the Japanese countryside flashed by in a blur of speed, smoke and drizzle, I shed the trappings of a tramp to become a man of means, a figure to be reckoned with. To be exact, I put on a jacket and tie.

Until then I had been held under virtual arrest in a small cubicle near the door of the accelerating train, my punishment for not being able to produce a ticket. I had bought one but somehow lost it. Naively judging honesty the best policy, I had surrendered myself to the conductor and tried to explain. He understood just enough of what I was trying to tell him to decide he did not believe any of it. Foreigners who pay fares, it seems, wear suits. Only feeble-minded foreigners, it is often ponderously scrawled, at least when it comes to outward packaging. Only foreigners talk excitedly of bullet trains. Japanese know the difference. They dress accordingly — like extras from The Sound of Music with feathered felt caps and gartered socks. Tokyo intellectuals often look as if they have just come from a Jean-Paul Sartre lecture on the Left Bank. It does not matter that hats and dark glasses went out decades ago in Paris. Clothes, like much else in Japanese life, obey stylised, even fossilised, patterns. If they don't, only confusion and chaos can follow.

Many Japanese found proof of this apparently axiomatic truth in reports from Peru that a band of Marxist guerrillas had penetrated the residency of their ambassador in Lima by dressing up as waiters. Stories of guerrillas with bow ties and bottles of champagne acquired a special potency in Japan. Even revolutionaries are expected to dress the part. The use of disguises suggested a total and terrifying disregard for the norms of civilised behaviour. Reports of elaborate fancy dress later turned out to be untrue. The guerrillas had in fact done the honourable thing and masqueraded as only themselves.

ON THE bullet train to Tokyo, I had dressed like a slob and was therefore assumed to have behaved like one. For the conductor, it was an open-and-shut case. From his briefcase, he fished out a Japan Railways handbook and pointed in triumph at a bilingual dialogue prepared for such a clean-cut episode. It went something like this: Passenger: "I have lost my ticket." Conductor: "Hard luck." Passenger: "What should I do." Conductor: "You must buy another one." Passenger: "Okay."

It was at this point that I disappeared into the toilet clutching a small ruck-sack containing a change of clothes. And a change of identity. I looked at the door and put on a new shirt, a tie and a blazer. I looked at the conductor and worked. The conductor decided I was telling the truth. He apologised for the inconvenience, led me to an empty seat and turned to another page in his handbook: "I hope you enjoy your journey. It can help you in any way please let me know."

Save us from the saviours of England

Commentary William Wallace

THE passionate anti-Europeans who are determined to save Britain from continental domination are an extraordinary crew. There are nasty undertones of xenophobia, even echoes of fascism, beneath the coalition of malcontents who claim to be dedicated to the salvation of England. But there is also much which is absurd. The peculiar hold they have now established over the British political debate, far stronger now than when Mrs Thatcher was Prime Minister, stems from the absence of any coherent alternative definition of British national interest and identity from responsible leaders, not only within John Major's Government but also on the Labour front bench.

The faith which these anti-modernists proclaim is of old England, stocked with free men who have never bent to a foreign yoke, still governed by a Parliament which has taken root over the last 1,000 years in English soil. It's a mixture of Shakespeare, Charles Kingsley and Winston Churchill's History of the English-speaking Peoples, with touches of the Eagle and the Boy's Own Paper thrown in. The Daily Mail's post-Dublin European Council headline, "Eas 1,100 years of our history come to this", brought out all the old themes: King Alfred the Great whose silver penny was "the first real British coin"; the image of an unbroken tradition stretching from the ninth century to the present day, and the ever-present threat of continental invasion (this time in a form of a German-dominated single currency) to British liberties.

The Eurosceptic faith imposes the myth of Anglo-Saxon England on the rest of Britain, with the conquests of Wales and Ireland and the later union with Scotland swept out of the story. And it bends English history to fit the model which Protestant, Whig, Unionist historians successfully created 100-150 years ago, to inspire young men in the new public schools with a sense of patriotic duty and to educate the industrial working class to see themselves as British. There's no mention here of the Hapsburgs, the Jesuits from Prague and Spain who slipped in and out of England plotting against Good Queen Bess. There are characters in Tolstoy who resemble Michael Howard; but they are not among Tolstoy's Englishmen, nor his heroes. Then there are the Scots who have been converted to faith in the superiority of England: Norman through intimate dealings across European currencies in the 18th and 19th centuries. Nor does the myth fit the motley collection of romanticies who propound it. For a start, an astonishingly large number are not really English, in their own exclusive terms. The UK Independence Party's candidate in the Barnsley by-election was Nikolai Tolstoy — a name redolent of European high culture rather than of Saxons rooted in England since before the Norman conquest. Sir James Goldsmith, who stems from a great European financial family, made his money largely in New York, and invests it from Mexico to France. If you are looking for a quintessentially English politician, all bear-belly and beef — the sort of MP Henry Fielding depicted, Lewis Namier admired, and Gilray lampooned — the Ken Clarke is the man. John Redwood and Michael Portillo, the heroes of the Right, come closer to Charles Kingsley's description (in Westward Ho!) of the candidate Jesuit from Prague and Spain who slipped in and out of England plotting against Good Queen Bess. There are characters in Tolstoy who resemble Michael Howard; but they are not among Tolstoy's Englishmen, nor his heroes. Then there are the Scots who have been converted to faith in the superiority of England: Norman by upbringing or conversion. Paul Johnson is as one with Ian Paisley in his hatred of the European project, though the target of his religious invective is the Church of England — rather than of Rome. Charles Moore combines the political attitudes of an 18th-century Protestant Englishman with the religious posture of pre-Enlightenment Catholicism. Public opinion is shaped by political debate and political leadership, reflected through the media. Richard Littlejohn in the Daily Mail referred to the French and Germans Britain's allies within Nato — as "our natural enemies". Helmut Kohl is regularly referred to in the same paragraph as Hitler, Chirac as Napoleon. It will take some time for any new government to get across a more rational understanding of British interests. But time is the one thing a new government will not have on European policy — which is the heart of British foreign policy. Labour's preference for temporising in its turn with the Eurosceptic press, concealing from the public the hard choices to be made while focusing on quiet consultation with Continental socialist parties, risks leaving it to face the Inter-Governmental Conference with an unprepared electorate and an actively sceptical press.

Now is not the time to give more ground to the Eurosceptics. We should be concentrating our efforts on exposing the real danger to Britain's long-term interests of being driven by the current hysteria into dropping out of active engagement in European international politics. Lord Wallace of Saltaire is a Liberal Democrat working peer and author of Opening The Door: The Enlargement Of Nato And The EU (Centre for European Reform)

Laumont, Teddy Taylor, Michael Forsyth, defenders of the British Union against the European Union. They are joined by Ulster Unionists like David Trimble, who (the Financial Times reported on December 23) "is closely connected to a circle that sees Brussels and Dublin as two forces both contributing to the undermining of the UK". Rupert Murdoch had told the Financial Times a few days earlier that he is opposed to EMU because he "believes there will be an inevitable loss of economic sovereignty by 'British choice' voters". The English nationalist camp have set by without proof as Britain's economic assets have been sold off to foreign buyers over the past 20 years, largely to finance cuts in income tax. The last British-owned car company was sold to the Germans. Eurosceptics so love to hate. The Americans have taken over the electricity network which English municipal enterprise built, while several of our water and our rail companies have gone to the French. Japanese, Korean and Taiwanese investments have given British a successful electronics sector, with financial inducements from public funds to create British subsidiaries — but that's hardly the stuff of which pride in the strength of an independent British economy can be rebuilt.

ENGLISH nationalism over the past 500 years has been intrinsically anti-Catholic. Brussels and Dublin, for Ulster Unionists, are linked by the Church of Rome and the Treaty of Rome; Sir James Goldsmith represents for them a welcome anti-Catholic ally. Yet many of the journalists who campaign for a free Britain in newspapers with proprietors who live in New York, Toronto or Paris are themselves Roman Catholics

Tabloids again cast the first stone

Paul Foot

THE Tasteful Headline Of The Year Award must surely go to the Daily Mail for its Boxing Day front page entitled SHAME OF NURSE IN SAUDI MURDER. The Mail story, which, as usual, was reiterated faithfully in the Mail's chief rival, the Express, revealed that Lucille McLachlan, a nurse charged with murdering a colleague in Saudi Arabia, was sacked from a Scottish hospital for allegedly using stolen credit cards. If you felt a pang of sympathy for a woman detained in a Saudi prison under a legal system run by a greedy and cruel dictatorship, you will not rest easy. Anyone sacked for allegedly stealing credit cards in Riyadh and Jeddah, who reports took me back to two previous stories with a similar thrust. The first, seven years ago, was the triumphant revelation in the Observer reporter Farzad Bazraf, who was awaiting the death sentence on spying charges trumped up by an other dictatorship, that of Saddam Hussein in Iraq, had long ago robbed a building society. The conclusion was plain. Why should anyone weep for such a man, let alone campaign for him?

The second was the 1979 death of another nurse in Saudi Arabia, Helen Smith. People usually remember the Helen Smith "fell off a balcony while making love". Both "facts", which originated in the Foreign Office, are wrong. The full inquest, which was finally heard in Leeds in 1983, came to the conclusion that the nurse's father, Ron Smith, revealed: a) the nurse's injuries were wholly inconsistent with a fall from the side of the head; b) she had been killed by a savage blow to the side of the head; c) she had been raped; and d) the injuries caused by the rape had originally been concealed by order of Her Majesty's Coroner, a former Mayor of Ripon. Common to all three cases was an instinctive and sustained effort by the British government and its press to cover up for the dictators. Why? Because they buy so many British arms. The rhetoric of British democracy — freedom from arbitrary arrest, independence of the judiciary etc — has to be set on one side because of the increasing dependence of that democracy on arms sales to regimes that suppress democracy in all its forms. Further proof of this process comes from the recent National Audit Office report on aid to Indonesia, which was provoked by Ann Clwyd, Labour MP for Cynon Valley. In 1983, the servant of another dictatorship, the Indonesian Chief of Police, came to Britain. After discussions with him, some brilliant brains in the Overseas Development Administration conceived the notion that helping the Indonesian police could be classified as "aid". The Foreign Office leapt for joy and told the ODA to hurry up with this "aid" project because the NAO report has it, "delays would hardly have a favourable impact on the Chief of Police who had moved on to become a presidential adviser and was likely to play a crucial role in decisions on future military procurement for the Indonesian armed forces". Entranced by those magic words "military procurement" (meaning profits from the merchant-dise of death), government "aid" to the poor was diverted into training police to beat up the poor. President Suharto of Indonesia, by the way, believes in having the poor as well as beating them up. So he's instructed all rich people and companies to pay 2 per cent of their income to the Autonomy Prosperity Foundation, which will help the poor. Proof positive that all this money will go directly to the poor are the names of the head of the Foundation and its most well-known board member: President Suharto and his son Bambang.

GOVERNMENT policy on these matters was admirably summed up in a recent letter from Foreign Office minister David Davis to a supporter of Amnesty International in Sussex. She wrote to her MP complaining about human rights abuses in Turkey. After acknowledging "routine and systematic torture" by the Turkish authorities, Davis wrote: "We believe the most effective way of encouraging progress is to promote a closer association between Turkey and European institutions." He cited "the EU/Turkey Customs Union" as an "important part of that process". This puzzled the Amnesty supporter, who had also complained about Turkish torture to her MEP, James Fyfe. Mr Fyfe wrote: "We believe that the abuse of human rights in Turkey is in direct contravention of the Customs agreement." So there we have it plain. The government's policy for reducing torture and human rights abuse by other regimes is to smuggle up to the regimes under treaties and customs unions which the regimes, by continuing torture and human rights abuse, can then directly contravene.

Two tired tyrants

As popular opposition pecks away in Serbia and Croatia, Ian Traynor predicts that 1997 could see the downfall of Presidents Milosevic and Tudjman

BOSNIA'S Alija Izetbegovic once memorably likened having to choose between Europe's timpo twins, Presidents Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia and Franjo Tudjman of Croatia, to that between leukaemia and a brain tumour. The new-year cheer, however tasteless it may sound, is that the diseased growths may prove terminal in 1997, that the two despots who plotted and battled to carve up former Yugoslavia between them are toppled by a homegrown surge of people's power. The seven years after the collapse of eastern Europe's communist regimes, the historical rubbish dump, the Western powers, through a misdirected policy of Realpolitik driven by fear of what Milosevic's and Tudjman's fall would mean for Bosnia, Serbia, and Croatia, may yet help the bad guys to serve up in power. It is no accident that early in the six weeks of public protest in Belgrade, the demonstrators made a bee-line for the American Embassy and burnt the Stars and Stripes. They correctly identified the US, through its tacit, if equivocal, support of Milosevic, as part of the enemy of Serbian democracy.

Not for the first time in the blood-soaked five-year tragedy of Yugoslavia's dismemberment, the two prime vil-ains have good reason to seek common cause: survival, control, and power. The two are very different. Milosevic, at 55, is 20 years Tudjman's junior. The charming strongman is a brooding depressive, chilling and charming, who keeps his own counsel and changes his ideologies — communism, free markets, nationalism, back to communism — as often as he changes his double-breasted suits. Milosevic believes in nothing but his own power. On past performance, there is nothing he won't do to keep it. He unleashed the famished, he groomed, funded, and armed first on Croatia then Bosnia in a failed campaign of Serbian aggression. Before that he put his tanks and paramilitaries in the southern province of Kosovo to establish a police state over the majority Albanians. And before the wars of the Yugoslav succession, he turned the tanks on his own people, in Belgrade in March 1991, to quell the kind of protests now gripping the Serbian capital. Tudjman, by contrast, is a true believer, a nationalist zealot, obsessed with history, revisionism, and symbolism, changing the language, renaming streets, squares, currencies and football teams, speaking and writing in impenetrable archaisms, commissioning cod-medieval frockcoats and ceremonies. But despite their differences, the parallels between them are striking. Both are ruthless and remorseless. Both despise Bosnia's Muslims. Both sponsored their nationalist projects in Bosnia to carve that nightmarish country up after a pre-war plot to partition it. That campaign led directly to the war crimes of Abnicut in the spring of 1993 when Croats massacred scores of Muslim men, women, and children; and Srebrenica in the summer of 1995 when Serbs massacred thousands of Muslim men, women, and children. The parallels in both men's current survival crises are also striking. The Serbian challenge centres on free elections, free media, and control of the capital city. The challenge to Tudjman focuses on exactly the same issues. Milosevic annulled the municipal elections because he lost Belgrade in the full knowledge that opposition control and the accompanying power to establish free media would cost him dearly. DITTO in Zagreb. For more than a year, Tudjman has vetoed several opposition candidates for mayor of the Croatian capital after the Tudjman party lost the Zagreb elections. By decree, he appointed one of his party cronies. She then had to stand down because of corruption charges. As Milosevic fiddled the ballot boxes, Tudjman, bearing defeat at the ballot, moved the electoral goalsposts, extending the franchise to his allied nationalist Croats in Bosnia. As Milosevic's socialists lost all the key Serbian cities, however, Tudjman, too, was defeated in all the key urban centres. And just as Milosevic's kneezerk reaction when confronted with the current troubles was to close down Belgrade's independent B-92 radio, wipe news of the protests off the nation's TV screens, and arrest or intimidate nuisance journalists, so Tudjman's problems last month were triggered by the closure of Zagreb's independent Radio 101. Some 100,000 instantly took to Zagreb's main square in protest. George Soros, the Hungarian-American philanthropist billionaire, has done more to promote free media in former Yugoslavia and eastern Europe than all Western governments combined, while the roles of the controlled media in Serbia and Croatia in fomenting the Yugoslav blood-bath cannot be exaggerated. Two weeks ago, Tudjman's police detained two local Soros employees in Croatia, stole $5,000 dollars from them and grided them for 24 hours. The regime is now threatening to prosecute staff at Soros's Open Society Foundation on trumped-up tax-evasion charges. The problem for both men, of course, is for dictators everywhere, as they cannot tolerate what they can't control, and they can't control Soros. Increasingly, both men are making mistakes, miscalculating, and finding themselves outwitted by the people they have duped disastrously for so long. Within hours of the recent media crackdowns in both Zagreb and Belgrade, the bright young irreverent things in both capitals had organised internet petitions and computer-generated news services to beat the censors. Both regimes are now cranking out propaganda about Serbian plots to destroy Serbia or Croatia, branding opposition as treason. Such potent nonsense has worked to a degree for years. But now it is tired, generating only a pre-emptive outburst of outrage in Belgrade and Zagreb, Nis and Rijeka, Kragujevac and Split. Tudjman's election fiddles last year backfired, his media crackdown prompted the biggest protest of his six-year rule. In Milosevic's Serbia, elections generally do not happen unless produced by a pre-emptive result in that context. November 17 was a blunder for the master tactician. As was his move to try to defuse the crisis by inviting in Felipe Gonzalez and the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe to review the evidence. He has been extremely adept in the past at manipulating Western divisions and hesitation to his advantage. Not this time. Tudjman's propaganda machine at the moment actually supports Milosevic, blaming the Belgrade protests on Western scheming to topple the Serbian regime and implying that Zagreb will be next on the West's hit-list. Unfortunately, that is not true, except in one respect. Tudjman knows that Milosevic's fall would bring him that much closer to being deposed. And vice-versa. Despite Tudjman's claims, Western policy on both villains is essentially "better the devil you know..." for fear of the instability that may follow their departure. The throngs in Belgrade, and in Zagreb last month, know better: that it is these two men, Milosevic above all, who foment and thrive on instability, and that a proper Balkan peace will remain elusive for as long as they remain in power.

SAVE £200 BEST DIGITAL DEAL. FREE MONTHLY RENTAL. FREE MONTHLY SERVICE. FREE MONTHLY PAYMENTS. FREE LOCAL CALL CHARGES. FREE 24 HOUR BATTERY. PER SECOND BILLING. FREE LOCAL CITY DELIVERY. NOKIA 1610. £9.99. 0800 00 00 77.

W G G Duncan-Smith

Spitfire into battle

GROUP CAPTAIN W G G Duncan-Smith, who has died aged 82, was an outstanding pilot and an unforgettable character of the second world war. He could fly Spitfires by the seat of his pants, he could lead men — commanding fighters from Australia, New Zealand, Canada and South Africa — he was admired by other pilots and by ground crew alike; and he ended the war with 19 official "kills" in combat against the Luftwaffe. Duncan-Smith served in the Royal Air Force from 1939 to 1959. He flew Spitfires from his arrival in 611 squadron in October 1940 until, during the Malayan emergency in the early 1950s, he was the very last operational RAF pilot of the fighter.

The son of an Indian army officer, Duncan-Smith was born in Madras, and educated in Scotland. He worked as a test pilot in the RAF from 1936, but having qualified as a mechanical engineer took a job with a motor firm in Reading, joining the RAF Volunteer Reserve just before the outbreak of war.

With the Lincolnshire-based 611 squadron he flew sweeps and provided bomber escorts over France in the spring of 1941. By August of that year he had shot down four Me109 fighters and joined 603 squadron as flight commander. After a bout of pneumonia, he took command of 64 squadron in the

The next flight up... Duncan-Smith does a little basic identification with the Air Scouts

the importance of air power. The Spitfires of his new command provided air cover over the Volturro and beyond to Monte Cassino. These mobile wings developed their own camaraderie and expertise. After the desert and north Africa we were truly mobile. We did not need any paper instructions on how to proceed or where to go. Just a map reference could be enough. "Hard-lying rations" — wooden boxes of tea, dried milk and chocolate — would suffice and everybody knew their job; there were no bullish rules and regulations. After Rome, the wing moved north with the 8th Army to Civitavecchia and Tarquinia, Via Corsica, we crossed by landing craft into Provence in the south of France. Duncan-Smith dubbed the subsequent actions in France "the champagne campaign". We were supporting the American 8th Army and a mix of British and American airborne troops, and moved quickly up the Rhone Valley against enemy troops (Baltic nationals, and other eastern Europeans, fighting for Germany). We were given the job by the Americans of clearing the large area east and northeast of the Rhone, and we linked up with the maquis resistance fighters. We eventually took and made our own the well-bombed airfield at Lyon. When General de Gaulle touched down from north Africa in a Hudson he took the slightest notice of Duncan-Smith or his operations officers. That was our first lesson in postwar international politics. Near the airfield, we had our first sighting of war crimes; children had been shot there a day or two before because they had cheered the aircraft bombing the field; workmen had also summarily dealt with there for similar signs of support for the Allies. Duncan-Smith governed us with a light hand and he allowed us occasionally to amuse ourselves with the odd drink and a party — particularly in Provence. By the mid-1950s, Duncan-Smith's activities in the Malayan insurgency had added a third DFC to the two he won during the second world war. He also spent 1954 on exchange with the United States Air Force, with whom he flew subsonic F86 Sabre jet fighters. He retired from the RAF in 1959, and from then until

Charles Molnar

First of the smaller screens

CHARLES Molnar, who has died aged 61, helped build what could be fairly considered to be the world's very first personal computer. In 1982, Wesley A Clark and William N Pappan led the development of a new single-user computer at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Molnar, a young PhD student, was responsible for the engineering. In those days, computers were so physically large and expensive that the habit was for them to be used by many people at once, a process they called time-sharing.

The LINC — a play on Laboratory Instrument Computer and MIT's Lincoln Laboratory, where the group was based — was also unusual in being designed to support medical research by linking up with laboratory equipment in this way. It followed on from Clark's Average Response Computer, ARC-1, which was developed to record the brain's responses to sensory stimuli.

Molnar gained his doctorate in 1985 with a thesis on the mechanics of the inner ear and how it translates (or transduces) sounds into brain signals. Then he joined the rest of the core LINC team in defecting to the Institute for Biomedical Computing at Washington University, St Louis, where he worked until 1985.

As well as being a neuroscientist, Molnar was also a leading expert on asynchronous computer systems — meaning ultrazap machines which do not lock all their operations to a rigid electronic clock. Last year, he joined technical workstation manufacturer Sun Microsystems to continue his research in this field, which has the potential to revolutionise computing.

LINC was also revolutionary in that it demonstrated the practice of neurophysiology. It also helped to launch the minicomputer into an age which already had miniskirts and Mini cars. The design goals specified were that it should not cost more than $25,000 and that it should not be too high to see over (that is, a time when computers often had the dimensions and styling of metal wardrobes). That idea "at first seems only whimsical," according to LINC expert Samuel Rosenfeld, but, in fact, it "indicated Clark's belief that a machine should not intimidate, but rather be a friend in the dark dropped lightbulbs which rang with a bullet-like noise."

LINC was actually assembled mainly out of modules from what was then a small local manufacturer, Digital Equipment Corporation. Later DEC capitalised on this connection by exploiting the design in its PDP-8 and PDP-11 minicomputers. The PDP-8 was the first commercially successful mini and established an industry trend towards smaller computers.

In all about 60 LINC's were built, and their reliability became legendary. One that went into service in the auditory physiology lab at Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary on May 5, 1964, lasted 28 years before "the beeps, songs and flashing lights were switched off for the final time on what is believed to have been the last LINC in regular use."

The machine was then presented with all "the traditional retirement honours", including its own gold watch, and dispatched to the MIT Museum.

Molnar leaves a wife, Donna, and two sons, Steven and Christopher.

Appreciation: Irving Caesar

Let's get this show off the road...

THERE is a thesis waiting to be written on the theme in American song of a country cottage as a retreat from the metropolis. Tea For Two was not the first, nor perhaps the best, but it was unforgettable, the work of Irving Caesar (obituary December 19). It was written on the hoof during the pre-Broadway tour of No, No, Nanette. The song's co-author, Vincent Youmans, died, burnt-out case, over half a century ago. Caesar, however, visited his Manhattan office every day into his late nineties, even though that song — and the earlier

Swanee — meant he need never have worked again. He had met his collaborator on Swanee, George Gershwin, in a Fifth Avenue club, and the two novices decided to work together. They were a study in contrasts. Gershwin svelte and elegant, and his collaborator short and stocky with thick spectacles, a porkpie hat, invariably chomping on a cigar. Caesar's phrase about the ending of the first world war, When The Armies Disband, was ready, it was sufficiently beguiling for Gershwin. So to come in and play along on comb and paper.

But before Al Jolson encountered Swanee in 1921, other songs by the duo were incorporated in other shows. There was I Was So Young (You Were So Beautiful), a version of which is on Bobby Short's Er-a-vey for Gershwin. After Jolson took Swanee for his show Sinbad, selling millions of copies, doors opened for Caesar. If the Gershwin-Caesar collaboration was not sustained, it did yield a too-little-known gem in Nashville Nightingale from the forgotten Nights of 1932. Caesar by then had met composer Vincent Youmans, slogging away for a seemingly indifferent music publisher. After a brief collaboration, they came together at the end of 1925 on Tea For Two for the musical No, No, Nanette. They were drafted while the musical was on the road to boost its quota of songs after it all but died in Detroit. Along with I Want to Be Happy, Tea For Two made No, No, Nanette. It was endorsed by the then Prince of Wales, who insisted that the song be played again when he saw the show. As Alan Jay Lerner later wrote: "Youmans' melody was a stroke of pure genius. No one before had ever written dotted quarter-eight notes, dotted quarter-eight notes from beginning to end... No one has written such a melody, although I know of several composers who have tried. There is no question that it was an extraordinary melodic invention... the classic, soft-shoe rhythm" (it is also impossible for anybody to give a real-time order to a waiter without the song coming to mind, no mean achievement for a few minutes' work in 1925).

It should not be forgotten that Caesar had a penchant for practical jokes. Pianist and soustime collaborator,

Birthdays

Gordon Banks, former footballer, 58; Sarah Brown, senior civil servant, 83; Vladimir Bukovsky, dissident, scientist, writer, 64; Prof Sir Roy Calne, surgeon and immunologist, 68; Geraint Davies, Controller, BBC Wales, 53; Dame Kimbra Gordon, governor-general of Belize, 66; Sir John Houghton, chairman, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, 65; Prof Dame Rosalinde Hurley, microbiologist, 87; Mark Kaplan, violinist, 43; Timothy Mo, writer, 46; the Rt Rev Peter Nott, Bishop of Norwich, 82; Tracy Ullmann, writer, illustrator, 63; Rocky Ryan, hoaxer, 69; Nick Skelton, showjumper, 38; Patti Smith, singer, songwriter, 50; Stan Tracey, jazz pianist, composer, 70; Tracy Ullmann, comedian, 67; Sir David Willcocks, choral conductor, 77; Clifford Williams, associate director, Royal Shakespeare Company, 70.

Ian Lacey... the South Bank and Westminster's heritage

Ian Lacey

Belief in building a better city

IN a career of four decades, Ian Lacey, who has died aged 70, was a distinguished city planner, fascinated by what planning and urban design could do for the quality of the built environment. Although he was a very good architect, he concentrated his energies on urban development rather than on the design of individual buildings.

Born in the Wirral, he was a student at Liverpool University School of Architecture. He won the Reilly medal for his thesis, and the Rome scholarship in architecture, which enabled him to spend two years based in Rome studying medieval town centres and travelling in Greece and Turkey. He also worked for the architectural firm of Belgioso Paresinetti and Rogers in Milan.

Back in London, he joined the office of Ralph Tubbs (obituary November 30), the designer of the Festival of Britain's Dome of Discovery, where he worked on various projects including buildings at Basildon and Hemel Hempstead new towns. His next move was to the London County Council, where most forward-looking architects of his age spent time, joining Graeme Shankland's new town team and working on plans for expanding the town of Hook in Hampshire. The publication of The Hook Report was a seminal event in recent town planning, but the proposals were defeated by a local group of ex-army officers who organised themselves with military precision. After a decade as Southwark's borough planner, he was appointed Westminster City planning officer, and was thus responsible for the central part of one of the world's great cities. A key task was the creation conservation policies for Westminster's unique heritage and he was behind the 1984 book, The Living Heritage of Westminster. His policy was to pursue a balance between preserving the best and looking out for good new design.

In 1965, he joined the Department of the Environment's planning inspectorate. He was an active member of London's South Bank Group, which sought to save its Festival vintage concert halls and the Hayward Gallery from de-

Jackdaw

Last call

PERMANENT Brain Damage (Risk it! Risk it!). Too much Light Makes the Baby Go Blind. Licking Lightbulbs. Two Very Dangerous People Living in One Small Space Together. Two Very Dangerous People Living in One Small Space Together. Two Very Dangerous People Living in One Small Space Together. The male Intellect an Oryzomom. Dueling Bankheads Family Jamboore. Dr Seuss's Green Eggs and Ham and Gertrude. McFuzz: A New Musical. Cast on a Hot Tin Roof — A Dysfunctional Dixie Christmas. Wasp in a Lamphshade.

Rat Dog and Princess Toad meet the Big Bad Wolf.

Who Shot Doc at the Sock Hop. Cause Looote Balloons. More Fun Than Bowling. The Stage lists some of the more bizarrely named plays that you missed seeing in 1996.

Sky Lord

MANY Christians recognise UFOs and extraterrestrials as being under the authority of the Prince of the Powers of the Air, Prince of the Aerial Host, Lord of those that fly — Satan. Jesus warned that one of the signs of the end times was that it would be "just as it was in the times of Noah". In Genesis we see the account of non-human intelligent beings "breeding" with humans, creating hybrids and contributing to the proliferation of evil against God. The messages we see from contact with extraterrestrials and other advanced beings contain claims that they are the ones who created us, through genetic manipulation. That one characteristic of "alien" encounters alone should make it obvious that extraterrestrials and the rebel Sons of God of Genesis are one and the same!

When some well-meaning Christians warn against the deceptive nature of so-called "aliens" and what they reveal about themselves, the response is usually similar to [this]: "Your connection between the modern UFO phenomenon and the Bible is very insignificant. I would strongly disagree, however, with your conclusion that these super-human beings are demons. The evidence (from the Bible itself, in fact) suggests that the UFO phenomenon is by no means a method by which Lucifer is attempting to deceive us but instead is the method by which a society of ultra-advanced extraterrestrials (the gods, from Hebrew Elohim) have been interacting with humanity ever since creating us through genetic engineering. Aliens and angels are one and the same!

A taste of some of the weird thinking behind "The First Conspiracy" which details a conspiracy dating from the dawn of time and connecting

Satan, UFOs, God's hand in the Sphinx and the Cydonia Face, rogue angels and alien genetics — the usual suspects. Found at the equally named Paranoid Conspiracy Cosmic Rapture 2000 Page at www.MT.net/waucher/

Divorce card DIVORCE is no longer something to keep quiet about — or so it appears from the burgeoning industry dedicated to cheering up divorcees and celebrating the signing of divorce absolutes. Along with birthday, Christmas and anniversary cards, you can send a divorce card. Clifton cards, the first to launch divorce cards in the UK, now have a range of four: "I have mixed feelings about your divorce; I'm glad if you're glad; I'm sad if you're sad." reads one. Another approach is "Getting rid of him? Make it a clean break; or at least a compound fracture."

For those rejoicing in their new-found freedom, divorce parties are increasingly in vogue. Paul Van der Meulen of Banana Split has been organising divorce bash parties for a number of years. "We feature cakes cut in half and beds cut in half," he says. "They're generally good-natured affairs, but once you burnt an effigy of the ex-wife in her wedding dress."

A further option for those wishing to wipe out the memory of their ex is to have them neatly erased from wedding photos. John Henshall, a specialist in the digital manipulation of photographs, is sometimes asked to replace one bridegroom with another. "If someone's done the dirty on you, what is more subtle and effective than removing them from the picture? It ends to run the message home," he says. He is also in the business of reconciliation — putting back, after a row, the two torn halves of a photograph, and hiding the join.

US publishers D and D Communications have cashed in on the new marketability of divorce by launching a quarterly magazine on the subject. Chicago's Divorce Magazine covers stress, dividing the household con-tenants, and how to protect the kids — as well as tips on finding someone new.

Hot Air Virgin Atlantic's in-flight magazine described those cashing in on the celebrations of those crashing apart.

Handy Hints

WHILE traditional golf hazards are practically eliminated from Tundra Golf (roughs are snow-covered,

They said it... Hot Air water and sand frozen), the game does include some unique hazards not found during summer play. Keep the guidelines on the following pages in mind if you encounter those particular obstacles.

Sledders in the Fairway: If a player's ball is interfered with by the head or body of a sledder, the player is allowed a drop where the ball would have landed or a free shot from the ball's original position. Cross-country Skiers/Tracks: Should a skier interfere with a player's backswing, the player is allowed to hit again without penalty. Cross-country ski and snowmobile tracks may be treated as you treat cart paths during the summer-free swing and stance relief.

Freezing on the Green: This hazard is common among players who take too much time lining up their putts and is another good reason to avoid slow play, and can sometimes result in a penalty. Snowmobiles: While their tracks provide a great lie, snowmobiles themselves pose a great danger, as many drivers may not even see you as they scout the horizon for cross-country skiers to run over. Irrate Greenskeepers: Unenlightened greenskeepers may not recognize the assets of Tundra Golf under the misconception that play during winter months may damage a course. The truth is, the frozen ground actually protects turf from divotting. However, should an angry grounds-person disrupt your round, play may be continued at a later date from the last hole finished with no penalty to any players. From the Official Web Site of the Tundra Golf Association for those who simply can't keep away even during the kind of weather that we've experienced this Christmas. Found at www.octane.com/undragoif.html

Emily Sheffield

صلى الله عليه وسلم

Overseas development

UN target: 0.70

Sources: ODA

ELECTION BATTLEGROUND/Poor are victims of worldwide compassion fatigue

Nobody is coming to the aid of this party

Sarah Ryle

NOBODY could be blamed for having missed the first 354 days, but spare a thought at this time of Anti-Lang Syria for the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, as it limps off and quietly dies.

If Charles Dickens's Ghost of Christmas Past stalked the earth now, it might take the form of celebrity saint Sir Bob Geldof.

Rattling his collecting tin — no need for a makeover to achieve that lived-in-the-grave look — he would play Live Aid's Yuletide 1994 anthem, Do They Know It's Christmas? and point to a 1985 calendar.

That record and the star-studded transatlantic Live Aid gig which followed it were supposed to be the awakening of the world's conscience and the starvation-level poverty that was never going to be allowed to happen again.

But a decade and a year of international eradication later, one person in five on the planet will live and die hungry in 1997.

So it is worth asking why overseas aid is being cut in this country when the UK government boasts of healthy economic growth driven by a spending feast on the high street and manifesting itself in falling official unemployment and rising house prices. With such a lot of "feel-good" around, greater generosity could be afforded.

There are good reasons for finding the cash. Globalisation has replaced the cold war as the international preoccupation. Poverty of existing proportions does not fit comfortably with political stability or economic prosperity. Volatile, oppressive regimes have been shown to decline as income rises.

But British aid, which is fed through the Overseas Development Administration, is on course to hit a record low level next year.

The £2.06 billion allocated for aid in the Budget is a step nearer the £2.36 billion, at current prices, which was given in 1978/79 — but it represents about 0.36 per cent of Britain's gross national product. That is significantly less than the United Nations' target of 0.7 per cent.

Politicians now compare the UK's contribution with the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) average, but that was 0.27 per cent last year and is falling, so this shows Britain in a barely more favourable light.

Britain is not alone in its stinginess and it is America that would win a Scrooge of 1996 award for the cuts in overseas aid and the failure to honour earlier commitments to the World Bank's soft-loan arm, the IDA. The theory goes that President Clinton reduced money for countries that many Americans have probably never heard of in order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million) of its 1986 development aid budget. Parliament balked, but it did permit a carry-over of an unspent 150 million kroner from the 1985 budget instead.

Blaming a handful of nations for the international reduction in aid — which hit a new low of 0.3 per cent of the average GNP of DAC countries, is pointless. In a sluggish global economic climate, only just picking up according to the World Bank's economists, there were plenty of administrations looking for savings.

It would also be wrong to argue that aid is a left-wing issue and that an incoming Labour government can be expected to halt the decline in British overseas assistance. When Labour MP Clare Short metaphorically threw her toys out of her pram on television in protest at her party's treatment of the rail workers' unions, Tony Blair shuffled her from transport to overseas development. This was a clear punishment and hardly the action of a party with international poverty at or even near the top of its agenda.

Politicians like to think that they react to changes in public opinion, so the flagging commitment to development aid may reflect the belief that compassion fatigue set in after Live Aid. As if compassion were a commodity like gunpowder which could be exhausted after one fantastic firework display.

It is true that surveys in a range of countries have shown a small shift in public opinion, but it is only small. A British poll cited in The Reality of Aid showed that 90 per cent of participants wanted assistance maintained or increased.

During the recession, the fall in corporate donations — which have yet to pick up to earlier levels — reflected a wider tendency to view charity as beginning at home. Inadequacy breeds excuses.

An Institute for Economic Affairs study argued earlier this year that giving development aid to countries helped at best inefficient and at worst corrupt regimes. Its solution was to privatise developing countries and hand power to a series of letter-day CEO/Rhodes.

The World Bank has admitted that it is getting harder to secure government money for programmes and points to the rise of private-sector investment as a potential replacement.

But this is going to countries which are already benefiting from increasing aid flows, particularly countries from the former Soviet Union, and central and eastern European states since the end of the cold war. According to Actionaid, development aid money has even been donated to assist stockbrokers who are just starting out in those countries.

New research by Peter Boone for the LSE-based Centre for Economic Performance takes a refreshing stance. He concludes that even unconditional multilateral aid does not encourage oppressive regimes (oil revenues are more likely to buy them). On the other hand, he argues that the amount of money a country receives bears little relation to the reduction of poverty as measured by key indicators such as the infant mortality rate.

This is primarily because aid does not translate into investment in infrastructure and social programmes but gets swallowed up in consumption.

Even where aid is granted for a specific project, for example a road, Mr Boone argues that in many cases the road would have been built anyway and so the money is used for other purposes, boosting consumption immediately.

Or it is used for the road, but then depreciation occurs, no repairs are carried out and the money that was targeted at investment disappears over time.

On average, only 15 per cent of aid money is spent on capital investment; the rest boosts consumption.

Mr Boone says that investment of 3 per cent of a developing country's GNP in basic health, education and sanitation projects has been shown to improve dramatically infant mortality rates and life expectancy, and he calls for more conditional assistance.

Targeting is already popular with governments, and non-governmental organisations (NGOs) fear that it could be too popular because development aid might become less effective as countries work to their own agendas. This has already been seen in the row over debt relief this year.

Chancellor Kenneth Clarke called for the sale of more IMF funds to reduce crippling pay-backs by the world's poorest, most heavily indebted nations. Germany proposed this, apparently because it was refusing to sell domestic gold reserves to help ease the painful process of reunification.

Britain's reduction in contributions to the multilateral aid effort, and to UNDO suggests that it is also following its own path.

Given the similarity of multilateral action on debt relief to trench warfare — every small step forward takes utterly disproportionate diplomatic effort — and the time it takes for relief to trickle down to the poorest people, the main goal should still be cash for the sort of basic and relatively cheap projects which have been shown to have an immediate impact on poverty.

If some of the assistance fails to hit its target, then perhaps this is a price that must be paid for raising living standards among the people in regions like sub-Saharan Africa who are inextricably linked in people's minds with those Live Aid pictures.

Political and Gender Oppression as a Cause of Poverty, Peter Boone, CEP

order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million)

order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million)

order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million)

order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million)

order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million)

order to win co-operation from the Republican-dominated Congress for domestic programmes.

Aid agencies fear that where Uncle Sam leads, all others follow. But it seems that few nations need much teaching.

Even Norway, whose contributions as a percentage of GNP have been consistently higher than anybody else's and whose socialist credentials are glorious, stands accused of cooking its aid books.

According to the independent review of international aid, The Reality of Aid 1996, Norway is just one of the nations that has used tricks to cut its assistance budget. It tried to cover part of the cost of its contingent to the Nato forces in Bosnia by cutting 190 million kroner (£18 million)

IMF pulls plug on Mozambique

Unrest is growing over anti-inflation policy that has reduced the world's poorest nation to even more desperate straits. JOSEPH HANLON reports

PEACE HAS not brought prosperity to Mozambique. Four years after the end of the civil war, the poorest country in the world is growing poorer.

The reason is that the International Monetary Fund has ruled that annual inflation must be brought below 15 per cent before there can be significant post-war reconstruction. This policy is called "stabilisation" but former finance minister Magid Osman warns: "Putting stabilisation makes instability more likely."

Delaying reconstruction is the opposite of the successful policies of Europe and Asia in the 1940s, after the IMF is talking world war. But the IMF is talking a narrow monetarist line, arguing that the already minimal level of demand must be further reduced to bring down inflation before investment can be allowed to increase supply.

Mozambique was a cold war battlefield; the decade-long war killed one million people and caused damage in excess of £15 billion. The war ended with a peace accord in 1992 and highly praised multi-party elections in October 1994.

Donors want to help Mozambique rebuild, but the IMF has insisted that donors spend $115 million less this year than in 1994 on reconstruction which it regards as inflationary.

Fears are growing that people will see no gains from peace and democracy. "If the government does not negotiate its accord with the IMF, peace is threatened," warns Pedro Chibela, an officer of Sinteract, the independent workers' union. "Be assured, if things don't change."

This year there has been good rainfall and a record maize crop. The 1.7 million returned refugees look forward to earning their first big cash surplus. But piles of maize remain unstacked; thousands of tons will rot.

"The country is being strangled," according to Orlando Candua, governor of Zambezia, normally Mozambique's richest province. He notes that four years after the war, many rural roads remain closed and nearly all of the 700 rural shops in his province destroyed in the war have not reopened.

Roads remain closed because the IMF has forced the government, donor nations and the World Bank to cut back on road repairs.

Small shops have always been the focus of Mozambican rural commerce, buying peasant maize and other crops and selling salt, cloth and other basic goods. Shopkeepers are clamouring to reopen their destroyed shops, but the IMF policy to control inflation, inflation actually increased. Each year, as inflation rose instead of falling, the IMF imposed more spending and credit cuts. By 1994 inflation was 78 per cent and the IMF concluded reconstruction aid was a major inflationary constraint, so it began forcing donors to reduce aid. Inflation has fallen somewhat, but remains above 40 per cent (high, but not hyperinflation).

Deeper and deeper spending cuts mean that most of the rural shops, schools, health posts and roads destroyed in the war remain closed, stranding Mozambique's predominantly rural economy.

In the city, shop windows display imported luxury goods for those few who can afford them; children sell beer and cigarettes on the street instead of going to school.

Debt relief was high on the IMF agenda at its annual meeting in October, but debt relief will do Mozambique no good. Fund officials have said that any money saved from debt repayments must simply be frozen, because using it for reconstruction is inflationary.

As well as being the poorest country in the world, Mozambique is also one of the most aid-dependent. Most bilateral aid is conditional on Mozambique having an agreed programme with the IMF, so there is little room to manoeuvre. Each year the IMF imposes tighter and more detailed conditions.

Public criticism is beginning to grow. The central committee of Frelimo, the main political party, said in May that "macroeconomic policies lose all legitimacy when they inevitably lead to the total degradation of the life of ordinary citizens, reducing them to absolute misery."

The Catholic Bishop of Nampula, Dom Manuel Vieira Pinto, says that "the IMF must stop looking only at its computers and look at real people in Mozambique. I see an enormous disillusionment and sadness in the people."

And he asks: "Will this all end violently?"

Joseph Hanlon is author of Peace without profit: How the IMF blocks rebuilding in Mozambique (James Currey, Oxford) and edits the Mozambique Peace Process Bulletin.

Indicators		Tourist rates — bank sells
TOMORROW — UK: MG (prov)	USA: NAPM index (Dec)	Australia 2.04	France 8.22
Dec	USA: Industrial production (Dec)	Austria 17.81	Germany 2.53
UK: Unemployment rate (Nov)	FRIDAY — UK: Consumer credit (Nov)	Belgium 52.11	Greece 405.75
UK: Consumer confidence (Dec)	UK: M4 Final (Nov)	Canada 2.23	Hong Kong 12.68
UK: New home sales (Nov)	UK: M4 Lending (Nov)	Cyprus 0.794	India 59.83
WEDNESDAY: Holiday	UK: Official reserves (Nov)	Denmark 3.72	Ireland 0.98
THURSDAY — UK: Purchasing managers index (Dec)	GER: Manufacturing new orders (in weeks, Nov)	Finland 7.71	Israel 5.47
USA: Construction spending (Nov)	Source: HSECI Group/World Weekly	Italy 2.511	Japan 1.84
		Malta 1.286	South Africa 7.54
		Netherlands 2.84	Spain 213.25
		New Zealand 2.01	Sweden 11.51
		Norway 10.57	Switzerland 2.16
		Portugal 255.95	Turkey 173.720
		Saudi Arabia 6.25	USA 1.54

Year in which we will feel good and get depressed

Worm's eye

Dan Atkinson

CONFUSING a bet with a vote is a sure and certain way to lose money. Never do it. For example, rest the temptation to forecast a new year free of greedy executives, favouring references to the "tiger economies", drivel about the Internet and expansive propaganda about the enormous benefits British will derive from the single European currency.

Instead, play safe and forecast the same things everyone else is forecasting. Not only is there safety in numbers but also the depressing fact is that the word from the herd has an uncanny habit of coming to pass.

Thus, 1997 will see:

- A confirmation that the "feel good factor" is returning. Afraid so — this is going to be the high noon

- An intensification of the eastern challenge, symbolised by the Chinese takeover of Hong Kong. Yes, the boiler-suited Beijing serial killers will be basking in some serious PR. This year much "new superpower" stuff is on the cards — don't mention the power cuts, labour camps or public executions.
- A widespread understanding in British industry that people represent a company's greatest resource. Already, the capitalists have homed to a fine art the knack of simultaneously sacking 10,000 people and issuing a new "code of corporate ethics"; 1997 will see the two actions fuse into one (eg, "we fired 10,000 people whose lunchtime drinking habits breached our corporate ethics code").
- An end to Britain's tragic isolation in Europe. Sad, but true. Preacher

Man's Brussels performance will make that of its predecessor look like Winston S Churchill on a good day. Stockpile Sten guns, baked beans and those nasty black jerseys spotted by Resistance men in old films.

- An extension of the technological revolution into the lives of ordinary people everywhere. There's no escape, sad to say. Ubiquitous tractors and cranes will drone on ad nauseam about the "global digital revolution", shops will be piled high with expensive, instantly obsolete rubbish. Hide away somewhere with Radio 4 for company (it's still on air).
- A real understanding of economic and environmental interdependence. Pious-sounding forecast, meaningless but mandatory for any pundit.
- A growing sense that working women are finally gaining their rightful place at the very highest levels of industry. See above.
- A meaningful and long-term commitment to training and education as the only base for sustainable growth. Ditto.
- A new mood of confidence and renewal as we approach the millennium. Yes, its going to be ghastly. Head for the hills.
- A new respect for the professionalism, accuracy and integrity of the forecasting industry. See you next year!

Supplied by Wall Street Journal (London edition) and Reuters (London) as at close of business on 18th Dec 1996.

REVIEW OF THE 1996 FLAT RACING SEASON

Singspiel's globetrotting exploits put Stoute on top

Chris Hawkins on a year when horses took runner-up spot to rows and whingeing

POLITICAL controversy, rows over racecourse safety and the whip, endless whingeing from owners, trainers and bookmakers; nothing much changed in racing in 1996. In all this, much to the regret of the equine enthusiast, the action on the track was relegated almost to a sideshow but this review is concerned solely with the horse and his exploits. On the flat, in truth, it was not a vintage year and the names of the Classic colts will not linger long in the memory. The first indication that this might be a moderate year came in the 2,000 Guineas. As a spectacle it was a great chiselled head, subsequently had an inconsistent season. He was unplaced behind Bijou D'Inde in the St James's Palace Stakes at Royal Ascot but won at Goodwood and Ascot in the autumn to raise hopes that he might fly the flag in the Breeders' Cup Mile in Toronto.

This he failed to do after being poorly drawn and racing on ground much softer than he liked. He finished seventh to De Floss, trained by Michael Dickinson, who said the win gave him as much pleasure as the day he saddled the first five in the Cheltenham Gold Cup.

Although Mark Of Esteem failed to make the ultimate grade as a miler, he is a lot better than Shaamit who will go down as one of the poorest Epsom Derby winners for years.

As a two-year-old he won a little race in the autumn and, without a run before Epsom, it was impossible to assess him.

Lester Pigott, father-in-law to trainer Willie Haggas, was reported to have put Shaamit through his paces and been suitably impressed, but it must have surprised even the maestro how easily he won.

Michael Hills rode a good tactical race, going for home two furlongs out and holding off the late finishers Dushyantou and Shamit.

But that was the only race Shaamit was to win. He was beaten in the King George, the Irish Champion Stakes and the Arc.

That he did not come up to scratch was emphasised by the fact that the Japanese showed no interest in him as a stallion and he will do his duty for England at the National Stud next year.

The St Leger went to Shamit who reversed Epsom form with Dushyantou in a pulsating race to, Frankie Dettori and Pat Ebdary rode highly skilled finishes which again incurred the wrath of the stewards whose action in handling them brought derision on themselves.

Shamit and Dushyantou were honest but rather one-paced animals, something which was obvious to some when both failed in the Breeders' Cup Turf although this race produced a wonderful one-two for Michael Stoute with Pilsudski and Singspiel.

Walter Swinburn grabbed the headlines on Pilsudski having come back from a dreadful fall in Hong Kong in the spring. Once again Swinburn proved that when it comes to the big races he has few peers. Cool and unfettered he always seems to have his moment in the right place and he brought Pilsudski through with a superbly timed final furlong challenge.

As for Stoute, he went on to an even greater world triumph when sending the incredibly tough Singspiel over to capture the Japan Cup in which the Arc winner Hellisio could finish only third. After his earlier win in the Woodbine International, Singspiel had strong claims to be Horse of the Year but Henry Cecil failed in an intriguing battle with Saad bin Surour in the domestic trainers' championship but was disadvantaged by an injury to Bosra Sham which meant his 1,000 Guineas winner missed most of the summer.

Bosra Sham was not short of guts or talent. She won the Guineas on virtually three legs after bruising a foot a couple of days beforehand and this kept her out until the autumn when she ran second to Mark Of Esteem at Ascot and then floored Halling in the Champion Stakes.

That was her finest moment and Cecil's finest hour, although the runaway victory of his Lady Carla in the Oaks must have given him great satisfaction.

Unfortunately, Lady Carla had injury problems too and a condition called "kissing vertebrae" kept her off the track following a poor run in the Irish Oaks.

Both Bosra Sham and Lady Carla remain in training so next season is not short on expectation. But then that is always the case.

They say the prospects of seeing what the leading two-year-olds do next year keep racing folk alive during the winter and with the likes of Bahare, Putra and Sleepytime there is plenty to look forward to.

No review of this season can be complete without mention of Dettori's magnificent seven at the Ascot Festival.

It was the first time this feat had been achieved and Dettori is the best thing to happen in racing since the demise of the Jockey Club.

Derby delight... Shaamit gets it right on the big day at Epsom

PHOTOGRAPHER MARTIN LYNCH

Japanese wave... Frankie Dettori responds to the crowd after winning on Singspiel

PHOTO: GEORGE SELWYN

Beveled to prove the master

Kon Over TURF all-weather or hurdlings? Master Beveled takes them all in his stride and David Evans's versatile performer could well prove the star turn on Lingfield's equitack this afternoon. Master Beveled runs in the Manny Bernstein 20th Anniversary Handicap and though he was last seen on the flat at Newmarket on November 2, finishing eighth of 26 to Saifan in the Ladbroke Autumn Cup, he has been kept busy over hurdles.

He ran a cracking race at Sandown earlier this month when, giving 12lb, he ran the much-improved Make A Stand to two lengths in the valuable William Hill Handicap Hurdle. His astute trainer, who has a fine record at this afternoon's course, keeps Master Beveled (2.35) ticking over on his all-weather gallop and he looks worthy of the map. Richard Hannon also does well here and the Marlborough trainer could add to his impressive score with Effervescence in the Manny Bernstein Credit Betting Nursery. Hannon's colt has been a model of consistency and makes a quick return after winning here on Boxing Day. Backed down to 4-5, Effervescence (2.35) won an auction stakes by 11 lengths. He shoulders a 6lb penalty for that victory but is fancied to follow up. One can not back Rawl with any confidence for Guy Kelleway's three-year-old has gone 23 races without a win. He lacks finishing pace, but he should not cope too much of that to cope with four moderate rivals in the Manny Bernstein New Year Maiden Stakes when Rawl (2.05) found the pace too hot when third to Madrina over six furlongs here in November but this afternoon's seven furlongs is his best trip. The concluding one and a half mile handicap provides Zuno Fiyer (3.35) with a good chance to follow up a recent course and distance win. He battled on well to get a short head verdict over the Emerald Isle in the half-mile handicap but he gave the vote over Yet Again. The opening seller will not take much winning and it may pay to rely on Bon Secret (1.05) who ran well when third to Walkiki Beach in a claiming stakes here last week.

Dorans Pride has right credentials for Cup

IMPERIAL CALL's victory in the Cheltenham Gold Cup last season was Ireland's first victory in the race since the legendary Dawn Run in 1983 and chasing in the Emerald Isle seems to be enjoying a new lease of life. Now Danoli, who is accorded hero-worship almost on a par with Arkle, and Dorans Pride look as though they might become serious Gold Cup contenders. Courage and durability are the two qualities, apart from the obvious one concerning an ability to jump, which characterise a top class chaser and Dorans Pride has all three in generous quantities. The winner of the 1995 Sun Alliance Hurdle scored his fourth successive victory over fences on Saturday in the William Neville & Sons New Chase at Leopardstown.

Dorans Pride... devastated

With only three opponents he had little to beat, something reflected in his starting price of 1-5, but he made all the running under Shane Broderick to score by a distance. A year ago Dorans Pride was at death's door. An operation for a twisted gut was not successful and within 24 hours he was under the surgeon's knife again. This time things went better but it was six weeks before he was out of danger. Michael Hourigan, his trainer, commented: "I've never known a horse pick up so quick. Soon he was bucking and kicking and he seemed so well I was tempted to run him at Punchestown in April."

Hourigan resisted the temptation but has been able to get on with the Orchestra gelding this season. Another couple of runs will mean six chases under his belt and that might be enough experience for a crack at the Gold Cup. Hourigan is not quite so keen at this stage as Tom Doran, the owner, whose 25-1 ante-post voucher could ultimately be the deciding factor. Dorans Pride is now as low as 12-1 with Ladbrokes although Coral make him a 10-1 chance. "Things couldn't have gone better and I'm delighted with him," said Hourigan. "But we'll have to see how things go over the next couple of months before deciding about

McCoy bids to keep warm

TONY MCCOY is set to make his first visit to Catterick if tomorrow's meeting there gets the go ahead. Dave Roberts, the champion jockey's agent, said: "There's not much chance of any racing in the south or the midlands, so we've decided to go to the north Yorkshire track. Tony has ridden at most courses, but as far as I know he hasn't been to Catterick." Prospects are bleak for tomorrow's jump meetings at Fontwell, Taunton and Warwick, but there is a glimmer of hope for Catterick. There is no inspection planned and a spokesman said yesterday: "The track is raceable at present and we are very optimistic."

Today's four National Hunt meetings at Carlisle, Newbury, Plumpton and Stratford succumbed to the weather yesterday morning. With the cold weather expected to persist for much of the week, prospects are poor for the early days of the New Year. The prestigious televised meeting at Cheltenham on New Year's Day is in doubt and will be inspected this afternoon with Philip Arkwright, the clerk of the course, examining the prospects as "poor."

Lingfield all-weather card with form

A detailed racing card for Lingfield featuring various races such as the Manny Bernstein Trade Meeting, Sun Alliance Hurdle, and several handicaps. Each entry includes horse names, jockeys, trainers, and betting odds.

Raheen looks a bargain

RAHEEN, who looked a potential star in the making as a juvenile when trained by Michael Stoute for Sheikh Maktoum Al-Maktoum last year, finally got his act together at Wolverhampton on Saturday. The three-year-old, who was bought for 15,000 guineas out of Stoute's Newmarket stable, was wearing blinkers for the first time and turned the modest Eagle Maiden Stakes into a procession, scoring by eight lengths under apprentice Dennis Sweeney. Bill Turner, who now trains Raheen, feels certain there is further improvement. "When I first rode him in a bit of work he was like a horse who had only just been broken in," said Turner. "He just didn't know what to do. Since he has been fitted with blinkers he has improved about five stones. "I was going to run him in a 25,000 race here a couple of weeks ago, but he got balloted out. "I am now planning to send him to the South of France in the New Year with my Brocklesby winner, Indian Spirit. Both of them will run at Gagnes-Sur-Mer and then come back here for the start of the turf campaign." Greenspan and Dane O'Neill proved a winning combination in the Merin Claiming Stakes, the 5-1 chance coming home three lengths clear of Obelos. Les Eyre, who has enjoyed a wonderful year, took his score to 75 when winning with Murray's Mazda in division one of the Peregrine Handicap. Elite Hope, at 7-2, won division one of the Peregrine much to the delight of favourite backers for he was the only market leader to oblige.

Cross-country life... Kenya's Daniel Komen leads Jon Brown round the bend and up the hill early on in Saturday's 9.3km Durham international (main picture) but the Vancouver-based Sheffield runner pulled clear in the final half-mile (above) to win by 3sec

Today Aykley Heads, tomorrow Turin

Duncan Mackay on a mastery display in Durham mud that puts Jon Brown in the frame for a world cross-country medal in March

IT WAS becoming an embarrassment. Here we are, talking of our proud harrier heritage, yet no British man had won the nation's most prestigious international cross-country event for six years as a series of Africans jetted in to make them look second-rate. So a cry, as great as that heard 15 miles away after seven goals at St James' Park, swelled over the Aykley Heads when Jon Brown, a hardy out of breath and again invincible against the best Africa had to offer, gave British athletics a late Christmas present with a commanding victory in the Bupa-sponsored County Durham race. The 25-year-old Sheffield runner ended his successful year in some style by keeping his nerve and concentration to outpace the Kenyan Daniel Komen in the sixth lap of the 9.3km (5.8 miles) course and complete a hat-trick of major victories in December. On Saturday there were moments when the precocious 20-year-old Komen threatened to run away with the race as Brown, who became European champion in Belgium after beating the cross-country world champion Paul Tergat in Spain earlier in the month, ignored his sharp, aggressive surges. But it was the Vancouver-based Brown who made the decisive break with half a mile to go, the rhythm-setting course left to finish 3sec clear of the world 3,000m record holder and become Britain's first winner since Eamonn Martin in 1990. "I never knew what he would do next," Brown admitted. "But I was feeling really good over the last couple of laps." Those charged with sending Britain's best to the world championships in Turin in March will have failed in their task if they do not grant Brown's request for pre-selection. Come what may he will not run the March 8 trial in Northumberland. Next week he heads to Spain for another race but after that he will focus on preparing for Turin. Even so Brown publicly refuses to set his sights any higher than a top-six finish there. The 12km race, always a cavalry charge of elite performers and raw, uninhibited talent, is probably the least predictable event on the calendar, and comparisons of winter form on varying terrains are almost meaningless. "There are guys out there who are nowhere near their maximum," he said. "It will be a different ball game." Brown provides further evidence that it takes years of hard work and determination to become an overnight sensation. Yet the grip-faced Yorkshireman, who always looks as if he has lost a pound and found a penny, remains calm and undeflected from his true ambition in the midst of a celebrity which he hopes will encourage some of his fellow Britons to raise their game. "There are a lot of runners in this country with as much ability as me," he said. "The difference is, I don't think they prepare as well. I hope I have given them a target to aim for." While Brown was warming up for his race, another Yorkshireman who shares the same kind of philosophy was underlining his claims to be Britain's top middle-distance runner. John Mayock, who grew up racing against Brown at school, won the 2km invitation race despite slipping 400m from the finish and suffering bruising. Mayock, who has been coached by Peter Elliott for the past two years, reached the final of the Olympic 1500m in the summer but received more recognition for his victory at the Meeting of Peace in Sarajevo in September. "I think I can win a medal at the world indoor championships in Paris in March," he said. Africa did have a winner, though, when Gete Wami, the world champion from Ethiopia, took the women's 5.2km event with ease. Paula Radcliffe, who was third, put up a spirited defence of her title in her first race since winning the New York road mile three months ago after struggling with injury. Radcliffe ran shoulder to shoulder with Wami and Romania's Elena Fidatof until the final hill. There the 23-year-old Bedford runner suddenly ran out of steam and could only watch as her two rivals sprinted home. Wami came in 1sec ahead of Fidatof, with Radcliffe a further 5sec back. "I had a stitch just before and there was nothing left coming up the hill," Radcliffe said. "I knew I wasn't that fit so I was quite surprised to come so close."

Sailing

Morning Glory's moonlit triumph

Bob Fisher sees a 21-year-old record tumble in the Sydney-Hobart race

IT WAS all over in a twinkling. The Sydney-Hobart race was finished and the record, which had stood for more than two decades, was a thing of the past. Hasso Plattner's 80ft Morning Glory had charged up the River Derwent to the finish line off Hobart's Battery Point 29 minutes and 48 seconds faster than Jim Kilroy's Kialoa III had managed in 1976. It happened under a full moon, essentially in the dark, although anything but unnoticed. When Morning Glory rounded Tasman Isle with 40 nautical miles to go, there was every chance she would break the record of two days, 14 hours, 36 minutes and 58 seconds, and the winds were set fair for the German sloop to do so. The wind was in the west-south-west and the course, across Storm Bay to the Iron Pot Light which marks the entrance to the River Derwent, allowed her to sail with cracked sheets at close to 13 knots. She reached the Iron Pot 90mins before Kialoa's time ran out, but historically that last 11 miles has been the breaking of anything but records. In 1972 Gordon Ingate in Caprice of Hoon had the race sewn up but when the wind dropped away to nothing Ted Turner's American Eagle, already in the dock, became the winner as Ingate fumed and his time ran out. The capricious nature of the winds in the Derwent is legendary, but as Morning Glory marched up towards the finish, with the moonlight shining through her moulded plastic sails, the gods were kind to Plattner. The blue-hulled sloop, surrounded by more than 85 boats crowded with eager spectators, heeled to every extra gust, accelerating each time, and headed towards history. It had been a remarkable race for Plattner and his star-studded crew, which included the America's Cup winner Russell Coutts and his fellow Olympic gold medalist Thorben Giesel of Brazil. They had been early over the start, had returned to start correctly, and had been forced to nurse their mast — a replacement for the one broken only four days before the start — during the southerly gale of the first night, dropping the mainsail and sailing under only a small jib. In that time the 68ft Exile had gone ahead but when the strong north-easterlies blew Morning Glory topped 25 knots on occasion to regain the lead and head for Hobart. It was only after 12 hours of this that Plattner realised the record could be broken. Both mast and wind held to provide the crew with a bonus prize of A$300,000 (£143,000). "I will share this among the crew," he said. "I will look after the cost of the broken mast." Morning Glory finished 2hr 46min ahead of Warwick Miller's Exile and for a while it seemed that the apple-green-hulled Hoon Kong-based boat would win the race on handicap, but 9½ hours later George Gjergja's 47ft Ausmaid crossed the line to have a corrected time 6½ minutes better. With the wind falling once again, she seemed certain to be declared overall winner, particularly when Roger Hickman's Akara was 11 minutes too late and placed third behind Exile. It had been a race for the bigger boats, a hard one early on which had suited the wheat from the chaff. Only 17 of the 85 starters had reached the finish 24 hours after Morning Glory but, as the rest limped home, they are all assured of a reception they will not forget.

Home stretch... Morning Glory heads for Hobart

Basketball

White the Playboy pin-up shocks Sheffield Sharks

Robert Pryce

THE Playboy TV Leopards, the Budweiser League's fastest and fastest-shooting team, may also be its best team. They have reached the final of the National Cup, are well placed in the league and last night completed a perfect December, seven wins out of seven, by beating the formidable Sheffield Sharks 88-79 at the Sheffield Arena. "I still think we're the best team in Britain," the Leopards' coach Billy Mims said after losing 104-100 at home to the Sharks last month. On that occasion his choice of a zone defence was called into question by the Sharks' outside shooting, four of his five starters fouled out and his team hit only one of their 11 three-point attempts. Last night's game seemed to be going the same way until just after half-time, when the Sharks led 49-39 and the Leopards hit them with a 14-0 burst highlighted by three John White three-pointers. Robert Youngblood, the Leopards' chief inside threat, fouled out again but the London team outscored the Sharks 11-4 in the final two minutes to secure a wonderful win. White finished as the game's leading scorer with 33 points. The enfeebled Worthing Bears were in no state to prevent the Newcastle Eagles advancing their title claim with a 92-76 away win on Saturday night. Cleave Lewis, the Bears captain, hit four three-pointers in the last quarter to finish with 28 points. The Leicester Riders completed the year looking almost as debilitated. Despite 17 last-quarter points from Nat Reinking, they lost 85-78 at the Derby Storm, which gave them the perfectly wretched record of seven defeats in December. The new year should prove more prosperous with the whole team back to something like full fitness.

Hockey

Clewlow's late strike gives East significant territorial advantage

Part Rowley

APERFECTLY struck corner shot by Canterbury's Melanie Clewlow with only 20 seconds remaining saved East from defeat by South and put them in an almost unassailable position to win the Women's Under-21 Territorial Tournament for a record seventh time at the National Stadium in Milton Keynes. East's 1-1 draw with South means they are the only unbeaten side in the five-team round-robin event and have seven points from three games, three more than South in second place. Only South and West, who have to play twice today, can catch them but a draw by East in their final game, against West at 9.30 this morning, will give them the title. If East do capture the title it will be because of Saturday's performances. Without three of their best players, the internationals Kirsty Bowden, Purdy Miller and Caroline Gilbert, they had to open against a full-strength Midlands side who were strong favourites and hoping to equal East's record of six championship successes. Midlands looked the more cultured side but East snatched a 2-1 victory. Clewlow had a hand in both goals. She set up an early goal by Kerry Moore of St Albans, and it was from her hit-in that Sally Tredget (Old Loughtonians) deflected into the roof of the net for the winner. In between, Lucilla Wright confirmed why she is the leading scorer in the National League with a scorching shot. In East's second match on Saturday they only woke up when North's Lucy Clarke scored the game's first goal as late as the 49th minute. Clewlow equalised with another firm corner drive and East went on to win 4-1 with two goals by Sarah Marsh, a substitute of Clewlow's, and one by Tredget. Yesterday East were behind against South for most of the game until a fine strike by Charlotte Manchester but their pressure finally told with Clewlow's inch-perfect shot.

Tennis

Teenager flies in to give US a surprise win over France

JUSTIN GIMELSTOB and Chanda Rubin produced a surprise mixed doubles victory to enable the United States to beat the fourth-seeded France 2-1 on the opening day of the Hopman Cup in Perth. Gimelstob, a 19-year-old student from New Jersey, helped the Americans to victory only 12 hours after flying across the world to replace Richey Reneberg, who was forced to withdraw as his wife is awaiting their first child. The jet-lagged teenager dominated Guy Forget, who was troubled by blisters on his left hand, for the first set and a half of their singles match before fading fast to lose 2-6, 6-3, 6-3. Earlier Rubin, playing only her fifth match since June after wrist surgery, defeated Mary Pierce 6-4, 6-1 in 57 minutes. The American pair, who had never played together, then teamed up to beat Forget and Pierce 3-6, 6-3, 6-2 in the decisive doubles. Gimelstob said: "Towards the end of the singles and early in the doubles I was so tired. But I just had to hang in there and Chanda taught me how to play mixed as we went along." Croatia started the defence of their title with a 2-1 win over Australia despite Goran Ivanisevic suffering a 6-2, 6-3 defeat against Mark Philippoussis, who took only 59 minutes to dispose of the world No. 4 to level the tie at 1-1. In a battle of two of the game's biggest servers Philippoussis ranked 30 in the world, blasted his rival off court with 15 aces compared with Ivanisevic's five. Ivanisevic, however, complained that he had been forced to play in an untested pair of shoes after his luggage failed to show up when he arrived in Perth on Saturday. He said it had taken 18 months for manufacturers to develop his footwear. Wrong shoes or not, he and Iva Majoli, who had earlier beaten Nicole Pietrangeli 6-4, 6-3, eased past the Australian pair 7-5, 7-5 in another decisive mixed doubles.

Skiing

Alphand sails on sea of tranquillity

LUC ALPHAND won his second World Cup downhill of the season yesterday on a treacherous piste in Bormio, Italy which claimed several of his rivals. The organisers had put water on the higher turns overnight to harden the surface and hold it together and the racers found it difficult to control their skis. The overall World Cup leader Hans Knauss of Austria started first but almost fell when his skis slid away from under him, and he retired halfway down the hill. The world champion Patrick Ortlieb of Austria did not start because of a stomach bug; Canada's Brian Stummle and Italy's Peter Rungegger did not finish, and Switzerland's Bruno Kernen simply crashed out. The race was repeatedly stopped as later starters came to grief. "My first goal was to have a clean run and not to crash," Alphand said. The Frenchman, winner of the men's World Cup downhill title for the past two seasons, clocked 2min 51sec down the steep course. "It's a great way to finish the year," he added. William Besse of Switzerland was second and Kristian Ghedina of Italy. Alphand's main rival after four downhill, was third. "It was a race for champions and I'm glad I won it," Alphand said. "The course was very demanding, icy and hard. But I was tranquil throughout and I managed to keep the speed high and my skis on the snow." In Semmering, Austria, Deborah Compagnoni achieved the first World Cup slalom victory of her career yesterday. The Italian Olympic giant slalom champion produced two near-perfect runs in bitter temperatures of -17C. She was fastest in both and clocked a total time of 1min 42.94sec to win by more than a second. "I trained for the slalom over the past five years but never managed to win a race. Semmering really brings me luck," she said. France's Patricia Chauvet was second and the Austrian-born Claudia Riegler, who represents New Zealand, third. Pernilla Wiberg of Sweden, who won Saturday's slalom, finished 13th but widened her lead in the standings over Katja Seizinger of Germany, who did not compete at the weekend.

Speed king... Luc Alphand sets the downhill pace at Bormio

Sunday's best... Croatia's Goran Ivanisevic and Iva Majoli after their 7-5, 7-6 Hopman Cup win over Australia's Mark Philippoussis and Nicole Pietrangeli in Perth. Germany's Dieter Thoma takes the Four Hills ski-jumping event in Oberstdorf

Weekend results

Soccer

FA CARLING PREMIERSHIP

Table of FA Carling Premiership results including Arsenal, Liverpool, Manchester United, and Chelsea.

NATIONWIDE LEAGUE

Table of Nationwide League results for various divisions.

DR MARTIN'S LEAGUE

Table of Dr Martin's League results for Premier Division.

INSBROOK LEAGUE

Table of Insbrook League results for Premier Division.

LEAGUE OF WALES

Table of League of Wales results for various divisions.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Football

Table of Football results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Rugby Union

Table of Rugby Union results for various leagues.

Down and out... Dave Beasant can hardly believe he has made the howler that handed yesterday's match to Liverpool

PHOTOGRAPH: TONY MARSHALL

Soccer

Premiership: Southampton 0, Liverpool 1

Beasant bloomer sees Saints lurch nearer to the drop

Paul Weaver hears the neutrals titter as goalkeeper gives Barnes a gift at The Dell

LIVERPOOL will enter the new year with a five-point lead and as the 19-8 favourites to win the title. But they achieved all this with a performance at The Dell yesterday which can only galvanise their rivals with fresh hope.

They won through a shocking goalkeeping error that will probably find its way into one of those video blooper compilations in time for next year's Christmas stockings.

For the first time this season the visitors wore an all-green away strip but this Liverpool were semi-killed at best and for most of the match struggled to contain a Southampton side whose position now looks desperate after seven defeats in eight games.

It was a late, soft goal which gave Liverpool victory over Southampton at Anfield in September but nothing quite so bizarre as yesterday's 77th-minute effort by John Barnes, making his 300th league appearance for the club.

Southampton's goalkeeper Dave Beasant raced beyond the right edge of his area but his rushed clearance sent the ball high into his own net.

Southampton's manager Graeme Souness said: "That goal just about sums up the season. You have to feel for the keeper. There is not a player around who doesn't make mistakes but you didn't hear me saying that on the final whistle. The trouble is we keep giving teams goals and if we carry on doing that we will go down. We have gifted Liverpool six points this season."

"Teams don't have to do anything clever against us. The foundation of any team is its defence and we're not looking particularly solid in that area. Today we were better than Liverpool in the first half and although they lifted themselves after the break we continued to play at least as well as them."

Liverpool's only clear opening in the first half came in the 11th minute when Thomas put Robbie Fowler clear. But Liverpool's leading scorer, whose comeback had been keenly awaited after the disappointing 1-1 draw with Leicester, chose to shoot from the narrowest of angles instead of passing inside to the unmarked Stan Collymore.

Fowler and Collymore, who was substituted by Patrik Berger midway through the second half, were hugely disappointing. But they were denied their usual service from midfield, where Eyal Berkovic and Robbie Slater were outstanding in the first half.

Liverpool found something of their old momentum at the start of the second half but the introduction of Le Tissier brought an edge to Southampton's game and David James had to be at his best to deny a 57th-minute volley from the England forward. A minute later Le Tissier went close to winning a penalty when he was obstructed by Neil Ruddock on the edge of the area.

Seven minutes before the goal James was tested again, this time Egil Ostenstad providing a firm header from Berkovic's typical sharp through-ball. When Liverpool did score they might have added further goals, but by then Southampton looked past caring.

Manchester United 1, Leeds United 0

Cantona gives drab day a gloss finish

Ian Ross

MANCHESTER United's rise towards the summit of the Premiership has been met with startled bewilderment in some quarters but, as their manager Alex Ferguson said only recently, his team's priorities have hitherto lain elsewhere.

"It has been a good Christmas for us," Ferguson said after this unit's affinity as he gently chided those bookmakers who until recently were offering odds of 7-1 against a fourth United title in five seasons.

"I always knew it was going to be difficult to combine the differing demands of Premiership football and the Champions League. But we had got to the point where we said to ourselves, 'Enough is enough, let's get down to playing the way we can.'"

After three straight wins in the space of eight days, anything - quite possibly everything - again seems possible.

Ferguson's side were fortunate, though, for had they been up against accomplished rather than merely worthy opponents, they would have been beaten comfortably.

Leeds United seemed to sense very early that the ruthless streak that had carried them to emphatic wins over Sunderland and Nottingham Forest in the previous week was conspicuously absent. Sadly for Leeds, crucially for United, unfortunately for Liverpool and Arsenal, they could do nothing about it.

In what was a surprisingly timid affair, Leeds dominated for lengthy spells but its painfully lightweight are they in midfield that they created only one chance, Radebe mis-kicking wildly after Schmeichel had failed to gather Bowyer's first-half corner.

Probably the best Leeds can hope for this season is a meaningful bonding of supporters and new manager. The revolution of thought and deed promised by George Graham's arrival will not be embarked upon for some time.

In the summer months, when a manager's dirty work is undertaken, Graham will begin to drain the pool he inherited from Howard Wilkinson, moving on without ceremony or regret many of those players he chose to applaud at Old Trafford.

But he is a wily old bird. All week Tony Yeboah had rocked the boat by insisting that he should be recalled after an eight-month lay-off. And so, with the "give him enough rope" principle to the fore, Graham bowed to the Ghanaian's demands. Before being hauled off midway through the second half, Yeboah, boasting all the mobility of an oak wardrobe, contributed nothing.

"He looked unfit and overweight," said Graham with the air of a vindicated man.

The argument was to be settled by Eric Cantona's orthodox penalty conversion after nine minutes but it was being halted off midway through the second half which was to provide the afternoon's one lingering memory.

Cantona, half the player he can be but twice the player he was three weeks ago, swept forward imperiously, exchanging passes with Giggs, who was hauled down by Kelly as he shaped to shoot.

Impetuous... Eric Cantona strikes the winning penalty

Coventry City 3, Middlesbrough 0

Huckerby tops foreign legion

Peter White

IT MAY have been cold enough to freeze their noses off at Highfield Road on Saturday but in truth the heat is on for the expensive foreign imports of Middlesbrough.

Messrs Ravanelli, Emerson, Juninho and Beck hardly lifted an eyebrow between them to try to halt the alarming slide of the Teesside club, who have managed a totally unacceptable seven points from their past 14 Premiership outings.

If their manager Bryan Robson was hoping that the Boxing Day victory over Everton was the start of an upturn in fortunes, then this latest festive offering must have convinced him that he was very much mistaken.

"We cannot keep going on like this. We played well for an hour but then gave goals away," Robson said.

"We have a lot of injuries to defenders and have now picked up a couple more knocks. I don't want to start playing again so it looks as though I shall have to go out and buy."

The Spanish international defender Miguel Nadal, known as the Beast of Barcelona, is one player Robson has in mind.

An offer of £3.25 million has already been rejected by the Barcelona manager Bobby Robson but, if the younger Robson is prepared to increase his bid to £4 million, a clause in Nadal's contract would allow him to move to the Riverside Stadium.

But can Robson afford any more foreign luxuries? Emerson clearly did not relish the treacherous conditions underfoot. It may have been 30 degrees in both Sao Paulo and Coventry but the fact that the figures were in Fahrenheit here, as against Celsius in Brazil, made him a virtual non-competitor.

Juninho appeared only in short bursts, while Ravanelli clearly became more frustrated with his Middlesbrough colleagues as the game progressed.

The Dane Beck made no impact as Coventry dominated, with their £1 million signing from Newcastle, Darren Huckerby, proving that bargain buys can still be found within the home-grown ranks.

Huckerby, having headed Coventry into a 29th-minute lead, later caused havoc in the Middlesbrough defence with a lightning break which prompted the pursuing Morris to tumble over and deliberately handle in the penalty area.

McAllister scored from the penalty spot with accuracy and conviction, and Middlesbrough defender Cox showed when, in attempting to clear Teifer's cross, he volleyed the ball high into his own net to complete a miserable afternoon for the visitors.

Meanwhile Coventry's fourth successive victory provided them with their best sequence of league results in 24 years and put them in the perfect frame of mind for the New Year's Day visit of Sunderland.

But their manager Gordon Strachan remained cautious. "There is still a long way to go and there is no point in getting too happy or excited, only a kick up the backside," he said.

Derby County 0, Blackburn Rovers 0

Rovers rely on Sutton's sheen

Mark Redding

THE departure of Alan Shearer may have gone down like a lead balloon with Blackburn Rovers and their supporters but it is at least giving a rise to one of their players. Step forward Chris Sutton, formerly of Derby County, who has scored 15 league goals.

Last season an ankle injury restricted him to nine league games in which he failed to register and he became the forgotten man of Ewood Park.

When Shearer left, however, Rovers were once more forced to dial 5 for Sutton and the lanky centre-forward has since extended into the spring, left by the England captain to make the place his own. This time out he is Rovers' top scorer with six in the league.

Under Tony Parkes's caretaker management Sutton has been playing as a lone striker and he said the new system was more to his liking. "We won the championship playing 4-2-2 and I think teams found us out," he said. "Now we're playing more of a passing game."

Against Derby, Sutton had two good chances but his sharp header down in the first half was kept out by the home goalkeeper Fionn and his ferocious shot in the second was repelled by the crossbar. "I feel I'm still get-

Leicester City 2, Nottingham Forest 2

Return of Clough on full-time cards

John Lawson

IN THAT period he rejoiced in a superbly struck equaliser that cancelled out Heskey's 10th-minute goal, Isret regained the lead for Leicester in the 68th minute but Cooper's late, looping header could provide extra class.

If Clough is proving there is still a place for his mix of skill and character, then Leicester must be wondering what price their newly cut diamond will mature into. Emile Heskey is a fortnight from his 18th birthday and will score more memorable goals than Saturday's. But there are flashes of brilliance in his repertoire that could make the difference to Leicester's survival in the final analysis.

The City manager Martin O'Neill rightly eulogised about the passion and commitment of his injury-hit side but he also knows he has a special talent in Heskey that could provide extra class that will surely be needed.

Pearce already needs a rest. He admitted that his first week in his double role had left him "mentally exhausted" but he reaffirmed his commitment to completing his full term as caretaker before making a decision on his future.

"Management in itself is tough but trying to combine it with playing as well is doubly hard," he said. "Sometimes you have enough on your plate getting yourself on to the pitch but now I've got 12 or 13 others to bother about. I write down one team I think is best for the next game and end up with 10 teams scattered all over the living-room floor."

Scottish League round-up

Auction boot bonanza but Celtic play the lottery

Patrick Glenn

ON THE day that Paolo Di Canzio's cast-off boots raised £38,000 at auction, perhaps it was not so surprising that Celtic scored dramatic goals from Cadete and Donnelly - before Britton scored again.

Great fun, but the kind of bizarre goalkeeping that is unlikely to bring profit in Thursday's match against the more formidable Rangers at Ibrox. But the impressive footwear was being sold over the airwaves of a Glasgow radio station to raise money for children's charities.

Di Canzio had worn the boots once, at Aberdeen on Boxing Day, when he scored the winning goal to keep Celtic's title aspirations at least simmering. It was extraordinary enough when they were knocked down to Tom Hunter, head of a chain of sports shops, for £30,000; positively astounding when the under-bidder, the National Lottery winner John McGuinness of Lanarkshire, donated his failed offer of £28,000 to the kitty anyway.

A similar vein of shock and excitement ran through Celtic's match with Dunfermline. Vulnerable in defence, thrusting and dominating in midfield and sometimes exhilarating in attack, the Parkhead side could have scored eight and should have conceded four.

They lost the opener to Britton after six minutes and summarised the visiting defence so relentlessly thereafter that they should have been in front before Britton squandered a golden opportunity to double Dunfermline's

Nigeria sights set on Keegan

IF KEVIN KEEGAN thinks it is hard work at Newcastle there is an opening in Nigeria. According to local newspaper reports, he and the former Leeds manager Howard Wilkinson have been approached by the Olympic champions, who are seeking a coach to succeed Jo Bonfrere, who resigned in October.

Daniadi Bakio, assistant director of the country's sports ministry, confirmed the local newspaper reports that the former Wimbledon and Aston Villa striker John Fashanu had been asked to help find a successor to the Dutchman.

"We have got in touch with high-profile managers like Keegan, Wilkinson, Louis van Gaal, Johan Cruyff and Albert Ferris to select one for the vacant position of manager of the Super Eagles," said Bakio.

Amolu Shalibu, Bonfrere's Nigerian deputy, has been coaching the side since the Dutchman quit but it is hoped to have a new man in place by next month.

Bakio said: "We are desperate to have a new manager to work with. Shalibu, but we must be able to fit into and operate within the Nigerian situation. It will be disastrous and criminal if we fail to qualify for the 1998 World Cup."

Nigeria, preparing for an away qualifying game against Kenya on January 11, are second in their group to Guinea, who lead on goal difference.

Middlesbrough have dismissed reports linking their high-profile managers like Keegan, Wilkinson, Louis van Gaal, Johan Cruyff and Albert Ferris to select one for the vacant position of manager of the Super Eagles, said Bakio.

Amolu Shalibu, Bonfrere's Nigerian deputy, has been coaching the side since the

Cricket
Winter Tour - Zimbabwe
1 Day International
For regular score updates call
0891 22 88 29
0891 22 88 29
0891 22 88 29
0891 22 88 29
0891 22 88 29

The Guardian
INTERACTIVE

Handwritten Arabic text at the bottom of the page.

Five pages of sport

Athletics
Jon Brown takes the country
in his stride

13

Soccer
Liverpool stretch their lead
at the top

15

SportExtra

TEST CRICKET

Four pieces... Alec Stewart, left, and Graham Thorpe hit Brandes to the boundary as England edge to a lead of 136 with seven wickets left. Stewart's day at the crease ended in his first Test century when also keeping wicket PHOTOGRAPHS: STU FORSTER

Zimbabwe v England: second Test, fourth day

Stewart plays out of his gauntlets

David Hopps sees the England batsman lay a ghost if not a victory base in Harare

ONE of English cricket's long-accepted truths has been that Alec Stewart never scores runs while keeping wicket. Pick him as a specialist batsman and he will plunder to his heart's content; overload him with the wicket-keeper's role and he will perform as if he has forgotten to take off the gauntlets.

It has taken a long time but in England's tour of Zimbabwe Stewart has shaken off a statistic that has traumatised him for much of his international career. Bar-room bores will no longer quote his comparative batting averages, with and without gloves, to six decimal places; his first Test hundred as a wicketkeeper should take care of that.

Stewart had already set himself new batting standards as a wicketkeeper with his 73 in the opening Test in Bulawayo, an achievement largely overshadowed in the frenzy of an England run chase that finished only a run short of victory.

Yesterday he followed with an unbeaten 101, his ninth century at this level and an innings that should ensure that the second Test, and the series with it, is not lost. England begin the final day on 195 for three, a lead of 136, with visions of causing Zimbabwe an awkward last two sessions so long as they can safely negotiate the morning.

As every morning has felt like a Monday since their arrival, it might be unduly optimistic to speak of victory but things are a lot better than they might have been. England have been at their most inconsistent in this two-Test series but at the very least their character deserves grudging recognition.

Both here and in Bulawayo they have conceded the initiative with poor first-day performances only to claw their way back into the game with considerable determination.

A first-innings deficit of 59 still left them vulnerable yesterday, especially considering the slowness of the pitch and outfield which put every run at a premium.

At 89 for three, soon after lunch, the spectre of defeat was lurking. But Stewart was joined by his Surrey teammates Graham Thorpe and by the close a gritty fourth-wicket stand was worth 106.

Zimbabwe, and Brandes in particular, bowled well in the first hour without much luck. Instead it was the leg-spinner Paul Strang who caused tremors in the English dressing room as he had Knight caught at slip, a deflection off the wicketkeeper's pads, and then enticed Hussain into driving a fullish delivery to Houghton at short extra.

Had Stewart not been reprimanded on 15, when Dekker failed to hold a difficult catch at square leg, Zimbabwe might have been contemplating their first series victory.

Instead he bedded in, suppressing his natural boldness to reach his century in slightly more than six hours. Successive boundaries against Olonga and the second new ball took him there, a flat bat through mid-off being followed by a rasping square-cut.

Stewart has completed 1996 with the highest runs aggregate in the calendar year of any Test batsman.

It has not in truth been a vintage crop but, considering that he was dropped for the first Test against India last summer and that, at 33, his international career was held in some quarters to be over, he has not only emphasised his powers of survival, he has underlined his quality of performance. Remind him that Gooch's best years came after the age of 35 and he warms to the point.

"I've always had the highest regard for Graham Gooch," he said. "I don't model myself on him but I believe that in his attitude to fitness and preparation he does things the right way. I hope I have a lot more years in me yet."

Both Thorpe and Stewart have had family anxieties in the past year as their wives have undergone stressful pregnancies.

Such personal complications receive little sympathy in professional sport but Stewart's response has been exemplary and there was delight for Thorpe too as he survived for more than three hours for his first half-century of the tour.

Form suggested Crawley should bat ahead of Thorpe at No. 5 but faith and loyalty insisted that the order should stay unchanged.

"We owed it to the lad," the coach David Lloyd said. "We wanted him to know we believed in him. It turned out to be a damn' near perfect day."

Scoreboard

ENGLAND First innings 156 (without 4-18, H H Streak 4-33)

ZIMBABWE (overseas) 152-55
10 W Flower c Crawley b Gough 78
D L Houghton c Stewart b Gough 56
A Flower bow b Gough 4
A J Walker bow b Taitel 4
P A Strang not out 47
H H Streak c Crawley b Croft 9
E A Brandes c Gough b Croft 8
H K Hussain c Hussain b Croft 18
Extras (Dk, Wf, N2) 18

Total (106 overs) 228

Paid off wickets: 110, 131, 136, 138, 152, 157, 211.

Second innings 225-7-28-1; Gough 25-10-42-5; Croft 15-2-38-2; White 16-4-41-1; Taitel 25-3-55-1.

ZIMBABWE

1 N W Knight c Campbell b Strang 30
M A Atherton c Campbell b Streak 1
Y A Stewart not out 40
N Hussain c Houghton b Strang 5
G P Thorpe not out 50
Extras (Dk, N2) 7

Total (59 overs) 196

Paid off wickets: 7, 79, 81.

To bat: J P Crawley, C White, R D S Croft, D Gough, A D Mullaly, P C R Taitel.

Scorecard: Streak 18-5-47-1; Brandes 21-2-15-0; Olonga 7-0-31-1; White 14-2-10-0; Strang 25-5-42-2; G W Flower 7-3-9-0.

Commentary: R Taitel and K T French.

Guardian Crossword No 20,847

Set by Rufus

Across

- 9 Its blades control other blades (4,5)
- 10 A uniform colour, perhaps (5)
- 11 Records some tennis matches (7)
- 12 It could make me a lord (7)
- 13 Turn over at leisure (4)
- 14 Light diversion? (10)
- 16 Nursing runs (7)
- 17 New name given to single bloom (7)
- 18 Two lads get the game started, getting a very good hand (5,5)
- 22 Not all an unemployed actor hopes for (4)
- 24 People are often led to use them by mistake (7)
- 25 Number return with a piece of writing for broadcasting (7)

- 26 It's used in many long-legged girls' stockings (5)
- 27 Architectural side-show? (9)

Down

- 1 Make-up specialists in the theatre (7,8)
- 2 There's a certain wildness in such devious dealings (8)
- 3 Lashings of maple syrup (5)
- 4 Those that cheat at portnoo? (8)
- 5 French preposition in oral test (6)
- 6 Distress signal for use of astronauts? (9)
- 7 Irish police turn up silver with unexpected raid (6)
- 8 Funeral directors provide such a definite promise (4,11)
- 15 We shall shortly be having a gin cocktail - here's health! (9)

WINNERS OF PRIZE PUZZLE 20,847

This week's winners of a Collins English Dictionary are David Williams of Nottingham, Hans Boushaker of Mill Hill, London, C. J. Rosslyn of Tonbridge, Kent, P. D. Jackson of Hove East Sussex, and Paul Vincent of London.

- 17 Sailor banished to quarters for being a defaulter (8)
- 18 One who talks one round to see a musical drama (8)
- 20 Annual holiday ends too soon (6)
- 21 The boy found embracing the girl is beaten (8)
- 23 Street light to go off (5)

Solution tomorrow

Stuck? Then call our solutions line on 0800 338 228. Calls cost 50p per minute at all other times. Service supplied by ATS.

THE UNBLOCKER

The baggage we have been happily carrying in this century will be deemed more or less redundant in the next and we'll be gently asked to leave it behind. Our feelings about work and office life, employment and careers, transport and housing will have to change.

G2 cover story

طريقنا من الامل